WELCOME BACK.....DUDE!

If you're old enough you might remember that years ago, DUDE was a "men's" magazine published by our previous publishing company, Dugent—which derived its name from its two first magazines, DUDE and Gent. Both of these publications were marginal magazines until we changed Gent to a magazine featuring "D-cup" models. That publication went on to become the leading magazine in its field and the mainstay of the company. Alas, there was no instant brainstorm for the old DUDE, which quietly ceased publication many years ago.

So why bring DUDE back now? And as a gay magazine? Very simply, we believe we have the right idea (and the right name!) at the right time. Sure, we know the newsstand is a crowded place and there are no shortages of gay publications. But DUDE will not be just a me-too magazine. There's a wide gap between the well-edited politically and socially responsible gay magazines...and the rest of them. DUDE will definitely not be edited for the gay man seeking politically minded stimulation, but will be edited to stimulate his imagination and libido. We'll have some of the best erotic photography you'll see anywhere, as well as a variety of quality articles covering travel, fitness, media and other lifestyle themes for the gay man of today. And, of course, we promise you a continuing array of hunky models to salivate over: "dudes" you'll not see in every other magazine on the newsstands.

To make DUDE even better, we welcome your input: everything you like as well as dislike and what else you would like to see in future issues. We're going to start out rather slowly by publishing DUDE just every other month, and as we gain confidence that we have the right formula, we will look forward to a monthly frequency in the near future.

We promise to do our part with DUDE, dude.
The rest is up to you!

MALE CALL

DUDE Addresses Needs Of Gay Guys In The 90's

DEAR DUDE:

Bravo! Finally a publication that speaks to the needs of today's gay male. I am totally ecstatic about DUDE. It's a magazine that been needed for a long, long time.

As a longtime reader of gay men's magazines, I've always felt a top-quality publication for this particular niche was something of a rarity. But not anymore. DUDE is literally the answer to my prayers!

What's even better is that a publishing company with a solid reputation is behind this new venture. If anyone can pull it off, Firestone Publishing can.

My roommate (he's straight) subscribes to all three of your sister publications—Gent, Nugget and Plumpers—and I'm confident DUDE will feature the same quality of editorial content and photography that has made those magazines winners.

Once again, thanks for a great publication!

Edward, New York

DEAR EDWARD:

Thanks for bringing to light DUDE's high-quality sister publications. Here at Firestone Publishing (like at Ford Motor Co.), QUALITY IS JOB 1!

Female Reader Likes DUDE For Its Well-Hung Hunks

DEAR DUDE:

Firestone Publishing has done it again. You've created a new publication that cuts across all genders, and you've done it in a tasteful and professional manner, quite unlike many of the other beefcake publications on the newsstands!

I'm a 27-year-old female with a lot of gay friends, and while DUDE is billed as erotic entertainment for gay men, I personally like to look at the well-built, well-hung and handsome hunks in your magazine for my own female needs.

And that's the real beauty of DUDE—that it can be targeted at gay men but that straight women don't mind taking a peek, too. You're going to put the people over at Playgirl out of business!

Lisa, Texas

DEAR LISA,

Although, as you say, DUDE is targeted primarily toward a gay male audience, we certainly have no problem with you sneaking a peek at all the good-looking hunks we'll be featuring in each and every issue. Rest assured that the vast majority of models featured in DUDE will not be found in any other gay men's magazine! That's why they're DUDE dudes, girl!

Friendly Advice For A New DUDE

Fantastic, DUDE! It's about time someone came out with such an outstanding, high-quality gay publication. Thanks for the sneak peak. Now for a little advice on some of the things I'd like to see in your new mag:

1. Show some pictorials of nude males smoking cigarettes. Although the Surgeon General would have a cow, I find these shots extremely erotic.
2. Have you ever considered any male/male photo spreads? I think this would definitely spur the imaginations of many readers.
3. Show more nude male pictorials that depict males in very macho roles, like firefighters, policemen and construction workers.
4. Men with smaller dicks can also be attractive. All of the males in your pictorials don't have to be well-endowed. There are some very handsome guys out there with small libidos. Feature them, too.
5. The travel, book and fitness columns are great. Don't change a thing.
6. Feature more African-American men. Black, muscular studs are very handsome. Try not to exclude this group. For that matter, also include Asians, Indians and any other men of color.

Well, that's all the advice I've got for now. But believe me, I'll be reading the pages of DUDE very religiously in the months to come.

Once again, thanks for a great publication!

Ted, Florida

DEAR TED,

Thanks for your comments and suggestions...we really want to know what you and other readers think about our new publication. Smoking, male/male and ethnic model layouts are all great suggestions, and if the guy is buff and good-looking but not particularly well-endowed, that won't preclude him from being featured in DUDE either. As for fireman, constructions workers and the like: been there, done that! Check out the "Hunks At Work" layout beginning on Page 66 of this issue! D

THE DUDE NEXT DOOR

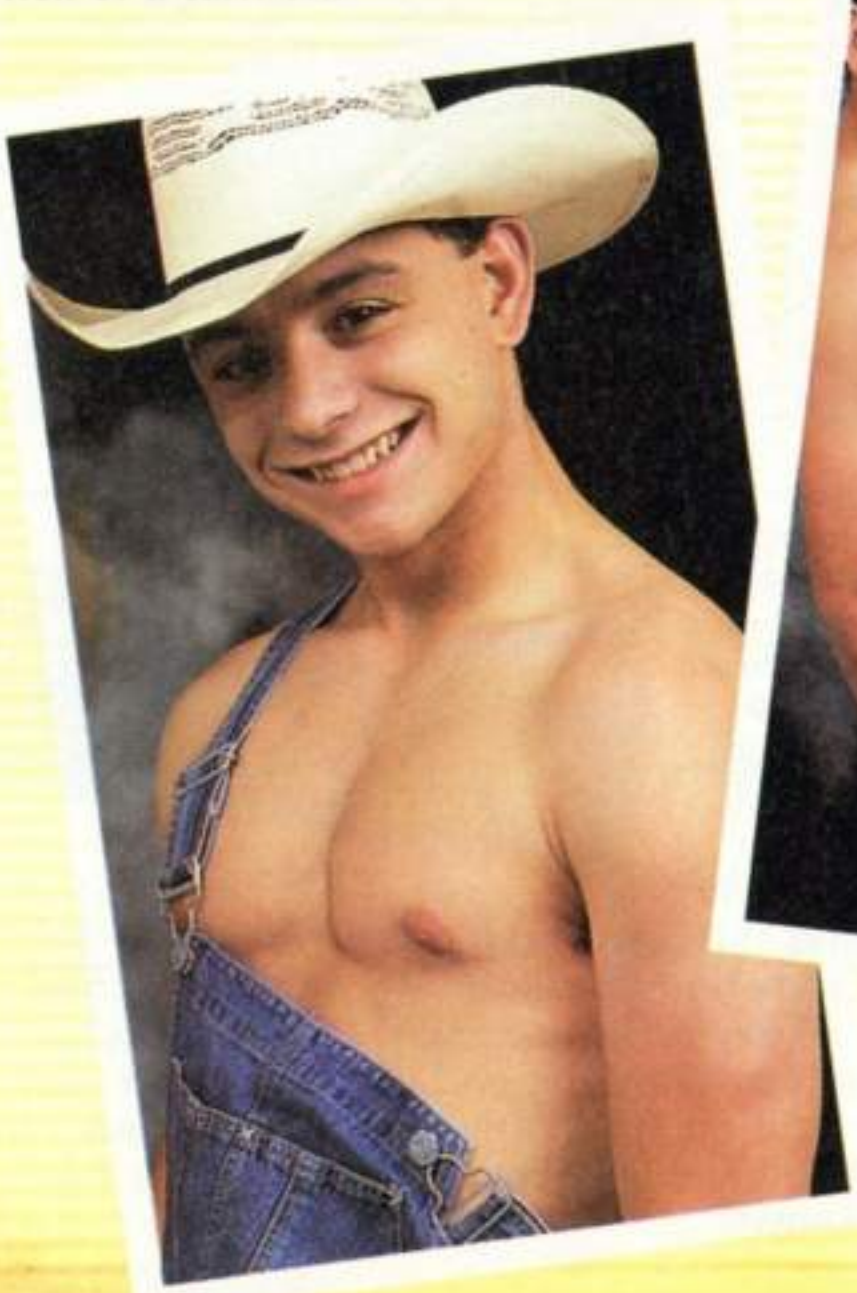
Welcome to "The Dude Next Door," DUDE magazine's hot new gallery of hunky amateur models. Think you've got what it takes to appear in DUDE? Then send in your nude and semi-nude pics to: The DUDE Next Door," 14411 Commerce Way, Suite 420, Miami Lakes, FL 33016. If your photos are selected to run in an upcoming issue of DUDE, you'll be paid $100-$200. You may also be chosen to appear in a full layout in a future issue! So send in those hot snapshots...TODAY!

First up is hairy and horny Jose, a freelance photographer from New York City. "I've worked from behind the camera for the past 10 years," writes this 29-year-old hombre, who was born and raised in Puerto Rico. "But now I'm hoping to cash in my talents from the other end of the lens. Hey, with my big uncut tool and huge libido—not to mention my Latin machismo—there's no way I can fail." Si, si, Jose!

Next, let's give a big DUDE welcome to Steve, a 25-year-old ripped and chiseled construction worker from Southern California. "I work in the hot sun almost 10 hours a day, so I take my shirt off a lot," Steve says. "I work out five days a week, so I'm pretty proud of my bod. Sometimes it gets so sizzling out on the site that I'll even strip down to my boxers. Man, you should hear the whistles and cheers from people on the street. It's one hell of a turn-on!"



From the Golden State we take you to the fields of Kansas, where farm boy Kurt toils the live long day as a hired hand on a 1,000 acre corn and wheat farm. "It's an okay living," writes this 21-year-old boy-toy, "but it's not what I intend to do for the rest of my life. That's why I sent my pictures into DUDE. Someday I'd like to do some professional nude modeling or even perform in an X-rated video." Looks to us like you've got the tools for success, Kurt!

Next up is 35-year-old Chris, a furry, well-hung hunk from Arizona who owns and operates his own roofing company. "The great thing about this job is the kind of people I run across on a daily basis," writes Chris. "On any given day, it could be some sexy blonde housewife in a shortie nightgown or some young muscle stud in tight shorts showing off a huge basket. I'm bisexual, which makes it great because as far as getting laid goes, the possibilities are endless!"

And last, but certainly not least, let's give a big DUDE welcome to Mike, a 27-year-old financial consultant from Chicago. "I've always had a way with numbers," relates this lean and mean computing machine. "But sometimes dealing with dollar signs and decimal points all day drives me crazy! So to relieve stress, I like to whip off my suit and tie as soon as I get home and then beat my beat while fantasizing about being seduced by someone really attractive. It's the best stress-reliever I know!"

A Tale of Two Brothers ☆☆☆☆☆

All Worlds Video, 1997
Written and directed by Mike Donner; Executive Producer, Dirk Yates
To order, contact All Worlds Video at 1-800-537-8024

Starring: Jim Buck, Nik Angelo, Josh Connors, J. D. DeMarco, Matthew Easton, Tyler Flannery, Kyle McKenna, Logan Reed and Cutter West, with Paul Saunders as Alex.

As the video opens, we are treated to the beautiful face and body of new-cummer Jim Buck, playing Craig, as he plows a "rent-a- boy," portrayed by Josh Connors. Craig tears his ass up and both achieve raging orgasms.

Craig is on the telephone with his attorney trying to find the whereabouts of his long, lost brother to turn him on to his half of the inheritance as rent-a-boy comes by to collect his fee.

Craig is then seen traveling through the desert to track down his long, lost brother when his Corvette breaks down. As a few epithets are disbursed about the quality of American-made vehicles, he begins a walk across the barren terrain.

Craig spots what appears to be a naked dude standing on a bluff masturbating. As he gets closer, another naked image appears. Soon we see three naked sun gods doing each other as Craig approaches. All climax wildly and as Craig goes to remove one of the mirage's mask, they all vanish.

As Craig makes his way back to his car, a pick-up truck comes by and Craig flags it down. He arranges for a ride to the nearest repair shop but finds there is none, but the driver of the pickup says he has a brother who can fix the vehicle. But once the car is diagnosed when they reach the desert home, Craig is told that it's going to take awhile to fix.

Upon entering the house, Craig sees and hears a wild fuck session taking place in one of the bedrooms. His driver friend seems totally unaware that anything is going on. Craig is truly perplexed and sits down with his face in his hands, totally exasperated.

Soon the very handsome Matthew Easton walks in, goes to the bedroom door and yells at his brother, Kane, to "take his fuckin' to the mountain" next time, and then shuts the door. He introduces himself as Abel and the driver as his brother, Brian. Seems Brian is deaf and dumb but is a great cook.

Abel is out working on the Corvette as Craig walks up. He invites Craig to join him for a walk in the hills and stay for dinner as there is not a hotel nearby. Seems it is all right for Craig to spend the night as long as he does not mind sleeping on the floor next to Abel.

Kane walks up and is pissed that Abel has offered the "city slicker asshole" food and lodging for the night, to which he replies, "You ain't got no say in the matter," and tells Kane to get lost until he gets a better attitude.

Meanwhile up in the hills, Abel and Craig are settling down to watch the sunset as Abel decides to become one with nature. He looks over and asks Craig if he, "might like to lay down in the all-together." Craig undresses and lays back.

Abel is watching him and responds, "Why do you have an earring in your dick?"

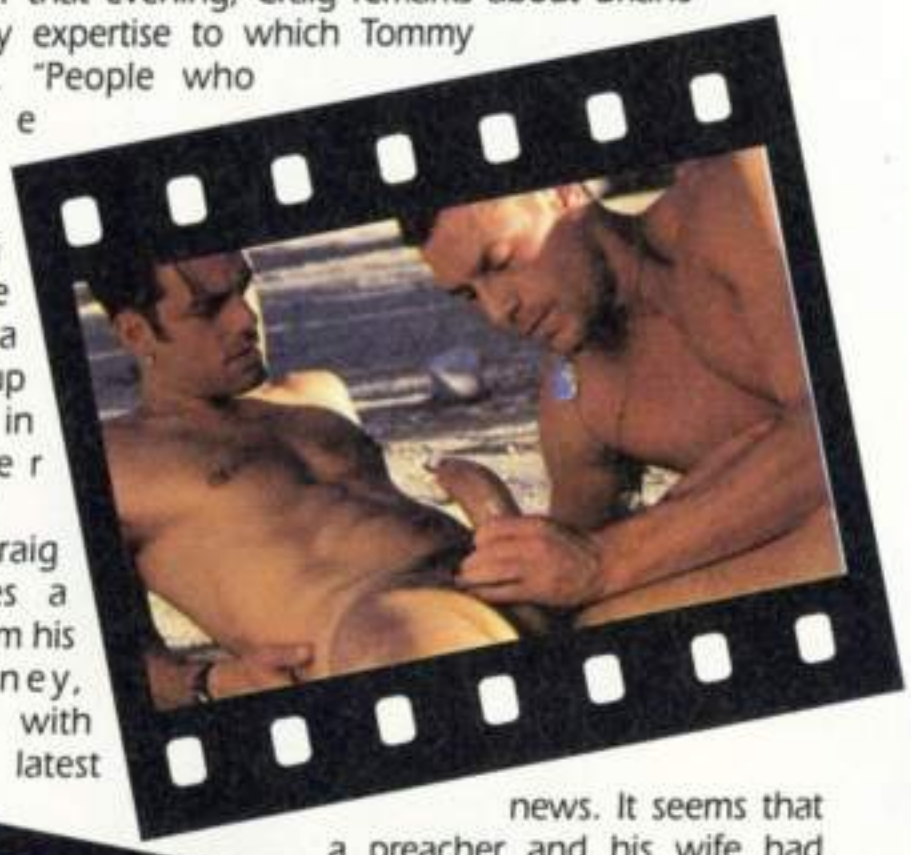
Craig chuckles and responds, "It's called a Prince Albert. It feels good when I come."

Abel says, "It's real shiny and pretty. Looks like a war medal."

Craig responds, "Believe me, it is a war medal."

Abel asks, "Can I touch it?" and you can guess what happens from here. Just as they finish making love Craig is kneeling erect and is struck in the head by a rock thrown by Kane. Craig is knocked to the ground and his head is bleeding. Abel stands up and banishes Kane from the spread and tells him he can go to hell as far as he is concerned.

Later that evening, Craig remarks about Brian's culinary expertise to which Tommy replies, "People who have shortcomings in one area make up for it in other ways."



Craig receives a call from his attorney, Alex, with the latest news. It seems that a preacher and his wife had adopted Craig's brother to add to his family of two boys named Kane and Abel. He retained the child's birth-name, Brian.

Craig is blown away! He runs out into the hills and screams and screams and screams!

Later that evening as Craig is lying in Abel's bed. He motions for Abel to join him from the floor. He reveals to him the discovery and the two are overjoyed. They make the most passionate love to a beautifully scored theme. Excellent video!

Palm Desires ☆☆☆

Oh Man! Studios, 1997
Produced by Bruno Riccelli
Special musical score by Sharon Kane
To order, contact Video 10 Distributors at 1-800-548-4310

Starring: Sean Dickson, Eric York, Joe Romero, Paul Morgan, Peter Wilder, Austin Black, Paul Carrigan, & John Sexton. Introducing Tom Pollaock, John Jade and Justin Woods.

Welcome to Palm Springs, California, and an exclusive all-male gay resort. A hunk is lying by the pool masturbating as he watches two other gorgeous guys get it on poolside. Another hunk is casually taking laps in the crystal clear water as the sun beats down upon them.

Two other beautiful men walk up and are pleased with what they see. Soon all are in a mini orgy by the pool ladder.

One dude suggests that they all get more comfortable and all six retire to the grassy knoll just outside of the bungalows. They all pair off and we're treated to three beautiful piles of naked sinewy bodies writhing in the sunlight. This is one incredible scene to behold. The cum shot delivered by one of the guys would put "Old Faithful" to shame.

Soon three of the hunks leave and go to one of the bougainvillea-covered bungalows. Hot sex follows and more gushing climaxes.

We are now treated to another stud sitting by the pool massaging his meat. Another strolls by and lures the seated one to a secret garden. The lush enclave is full of naked guys stroking their tools. Before long, they are all doing each other. As night falls, there is a huge orgy going on around a small campfire.

"Palm Desires" includes absolutely no dialogue whatsoever but it doesn't matter: this flick is a feast for the eyes. Sharon Kane's musical score flows beautifully throughout the video.

VIDEO SPOTLIGHT

AARON AUSTIN

A thoroughly switchable muscular boy-toy, Aaron Austin stars in Iron Man Productions' "Forbidden Love," a new gay feature distributed by Metro Home Video. This smooth-skinned hunk is as much at home with a fat cock head stuffed in his greedy mouth as with his own long rod buried up another hung stud's willing ass. The seductive lover carries the show in his scene with Canadian super-stud J.T. Sloan, grunting and groaning his way to a cum-splattering orgasm. Look for more ass-tounding work from this buff bad boy up-cumming real soon! To order "Forbidden Love," call Pleasure Productions toll-free at 1-800-999-2483, or, in New Jersey, at (609) 426-1777.

JIM GUNN

The Anchor Hotel ☆☆☆☆☆

Kristen Bjorn Video, 1996
Directed and videographed by Kristen Bjorn
Original music score by Francois Gerard.
To order, contact Arrowhead Distributors at 1-800-918-9130

Featuring: Mark Anthony, Rafael Perez, Pedro Pandilla, Dean Spencer, Andas Gartoni, Ivan Cseska, Sandor Vesanye, Gabor Szabo, Ferenc Botos, Sasha Borov, Antonio DiMarco, Mateo Torres, Tyson, Andre Navarro, Bruno Bianchi, Leo Rayos, Igor Natenko, Karl Letovski and five more of the world's hottest men

As the video opens we see an awesome-looking Australian sailor walking down a tropical South Florida sidewalk smoking a cigarette. Suddenly a set of keys lands at his feet. He looks up to see a hunky Cuban stud hanging from a second story balcony. The Latino hunk waves him up and they are soon joined by another giant-dicked Hispanic stud and a wild three-way takes place. Not a single orifice is left unexplored. The Latino hunk's orgasm has to be seen to be believed!

In the next scene, a beefy British sailor is strolling down a beautiful residential street in Coconut Grove when he spies two gorgeous Russian boys getting it on in a white BMW convertible in a private driveway. As he meanders over towards the car, they soon invite him to participate, and eventually all three of them head for a beautiful gated waterfront estate. Hot, steamy sucking and fucking follows. And for all you foot fetish fellows, there is a scene that has to be the hottest this reviewer has seen in a long time.

The next scene involves four hunks in a Miami Beach luxury high-rise condo. Each is saying his schlong is bigger than the other's. A cock-measuring contest erupts...you decide! Very expertly videographed by Bjorn.

We are now at the Port of Miami as two simply incredibly handsome hirsute hunks are shirtlessly strolling the dock by a moored cruise ship. They soon pass another handsome sailor sitting on a piling and invite him to follow. This guy's got the most incredible pair of warm, engaging, lipid blue eyes we've ever seen! What happens next is simply unbelievable: a gay Santaria ritual in a port warehouse involving 13 international beauties, including three hunky witch doctors!

In the final scene, a very handsome and humpy Russian sailor is enjoying the warm Miami sunshine at the beach when he meets another comrade from Mother Russia. They agree to go for some brewskis and broads, but eventually wind up in the first sailor's room in the Anchor Hotel. A very tender and erotic scene follows, with lots of entwined muscle, rimming, sucking and fucking. Totally hot!

"Anchor Hotel" is two hours of non-stop sensually charged erotic beauty starring the most gorgeous collection of international studs in the world. There's more cum shots per meter of film in this one than in any other production out there. Kristen Bjorn does it again...and then some!

CRUISIN' ON THE NET

COLUMN BY DUDE DADDY

Before we get started "Cruisin On The Net," here's some simple advice. First, if you haven't got a personal computer (PC) at home yet, buy one. And second, if you do have a personal computer but no Internet Service Provider (ISP), get one. Costs are coming down on both PC's and ISP's, so there's no time like the present to log on to the Internet experience.

As far as PC's go, the current Pentium class systems are on the verge of being replaced by new technology. In fact, by the time your read this, the new equipment may already be on the market.

Existing new and used Pentium systems will be available at a big discount with some very good hardware and software to go with them. If you haven't messed up a keyboard while surfing the Internet, you're missing out on all the fun of our time in the modern world of cyberspace.

We've all heard and read about the recent problems between subscribers and ISP America On Line (AOL). From my observations, AOL is gradually getting its act together again.

In the meantime, other ISP's have benefited from the mistakes at AOL. AT&T, Microsoft, CompuServe and hundreds of other service providers are offering competitive pricing. You can even get on through Netscape, but I prefer the luxury of trading with friends through email, as well as cruising the galleries to add to my collection.

Having said all of that, you're probably now wondering, "How do I find all the pics of hot and hunky guys?" It's really very simple! Once you sign onto the Internet through your ISP of choice and select their Internet connection, simply type in one of the following addresses for a list of galleries and homepages that offer the kind of material you want.

But first, let me recommend that you consider buying the services of AdultCheck because many of the galleries are now requiring you register with an age verification service to gain access. Where and how do you buy the service? Any gallery currently requiring you to use AdultCheck also offers you the ability to purchase the service from their site.(By the way, you don't need AdultCheck to access DUDE's Website:

http://www.sexmags.com/dude/ )

AdultCheck is one of the largest services of this type. Without it, you simply can't get in to "adults only" sites. It's not that expensive to obtain AdultCheck: the last time I checked, it was $12.95 for one year, $18.95 for two years and $35.95 for a lifetime membership. I recommend you stick with one or two years, as you never know what will happen to some of these services down the road.

Okay, it's time to get down to the business of find the hottest gay sites on the Web. For this premiere edition of "Cruisin' On The Web," I've selected just three sites but, believe you me, these three will keep you busy for months! By the way, these are gallery listings, not the individual galleries themselves. We'll get into those later. So here they are:

http://naughty.com/Arts_and_Entertainment/Photography/Male/
http://menonthenet.com/men4.html
http://www.adonisweb.com/links/index.html

It's important to type in each of these addresses each exactly as shown. Each of these addresses has dozens of sites listed. Once you have gotten onto the list, bookmark it for future use. Then just find a site that interests you, double click on it and you'll soon be at their door.

Don't forget: if you like the site, bookmark it so that you will not always have to download the entire list every time you want to check out the next edition. Each gallery will usually provide instructions on where to bookmark their site.

By the way, if you don't want some busybody nosing around on your computer when you aren't home, buy yourself some blank diskettes and always save your downloads of graphic material to your "A" drive. Stash the diskettes in your own secret hiding place. Better yet, share them with a friend!

I have explored galleries and homepages in countries all over the world. There are a lot of really good ones, and there are those that, quite honestly, waste your time and patience. So here's a few of some of my favorites. They are in no special order, and I've made a comment or two about each. All are listed in one or more of the listings I provided earlier.

http://www.worldnet.fr/~vonachen/

"Men At Work Page" from Paris, France. You know those French guys: they're always hot!

http://www.frontpagepro.com/buzz001/buzz~1.htm

"Buzz's Place" requires AdultCheck. Lots of hunks, hot and spicy. Large gallery with some of the best quality around.

That's all I have room for this month, but join me the Dec. '97 DUDE for the next installment of "Cruisin' On The Net." It's only the beginning for your trip in Cyberspace. Have fun and enjoy, but remember: aim low...you don't want to mess up your keyboard! D

WELL-HUNG HOLLYWOOD

COLUMN BY JIM BOYD

Welcome to the first installment of "Well-Hung Hollywood, a hot DUDE feature devoted to male movie and TV stars and other celebrities who have the biggest cocks, and the female size queens these men have fucked and married.

We've all heard that cock size is not important to a good sex life, but we know better, don't we? An inch or two more or even three makes a difference in a star's sexual reputation. And for all the talk about the bottom line in show business, in the bedrooms of the stars, it is measurements of eight to 10 inches and more that really count.

For 20 years I have been running the country's most notorious and controversial sex club and dating service, the Hung Jury. In the course of matching thousands of men and women with their ideal Mr. Well Hung, I have met and spoken with scores of men and women in show biz. They all share an aching desire to fuck men with huge cocks who know how to thrust those big, thick inches just right. For them, rulers and tape measures are de rigeur equipment.

PAMELA ANDERSON LEE: SIZE QUEEN AND DAMN PROUD OF IT

Sweet but outspoken, Pamela Anderson Lee was in print all over the place in 1995 and 1996 about being a nymphomaniac size queen.

Before marrying well-hung Motley Crue rocker Tommy Lee (from the photos showing them having sex, he clearly measures 10 inches long five-and-a-half inches around), Pamela expanded her high octane sexual energy with such well-hung celebs as actor Scott Baio (her previous fiancee), former "Baywatch" cutie David Charvet, "Lois & Clark" hunk Dean Cain, producer Jon Peters and rocker Bret Michaels from the group Poison.

DEAN CAIN

In the January 1996 issue of Movieline, Pam implies that all of these former lovers have big dicks, saying, "So many women fight over how big their diamonds are, but the size of the stones is really about their man's ego over his little thing. I think diamonds have a direct relationship to your man's penis size...That's why I have no diamonds."

BRET MICHAELS

She also told Movieline interviewer Michael Kaplan that Tommy Lee, who is the living incarnation of the Illustrated Man, has "Pamela" tattooed on his cock. Will he try to get it removed if they divorce?

A month before that issue went on sale in early November 1995, Pam was on the "Tonight Show" stating her diamonds vs. dicks theory, adding, "Fortunately, my husband doesn't have to compensate in that area."

In the May 1996 issue of Details, answering the question, "Does size count?" she said, "Unfortunately, yes, it does. There's a lot of ways to make people feel good, but personally, I think it does enhance things."

Why "unfortunately"?

Pam and Tommy, who was divorced from size queen soap star Heather Locklear, first met at a 1994 New Year's Eve party. Lusting after her from that night, wild man Tommy followed Pam to Cancun, Mexico, on Feb. 14, 1995, where she was doing a photo shoot. He met her in a bar and wore skin-tight jeans so his cock's outline would be clearly visible. That was a persuasive argument to Pam that he had something big to offer her.

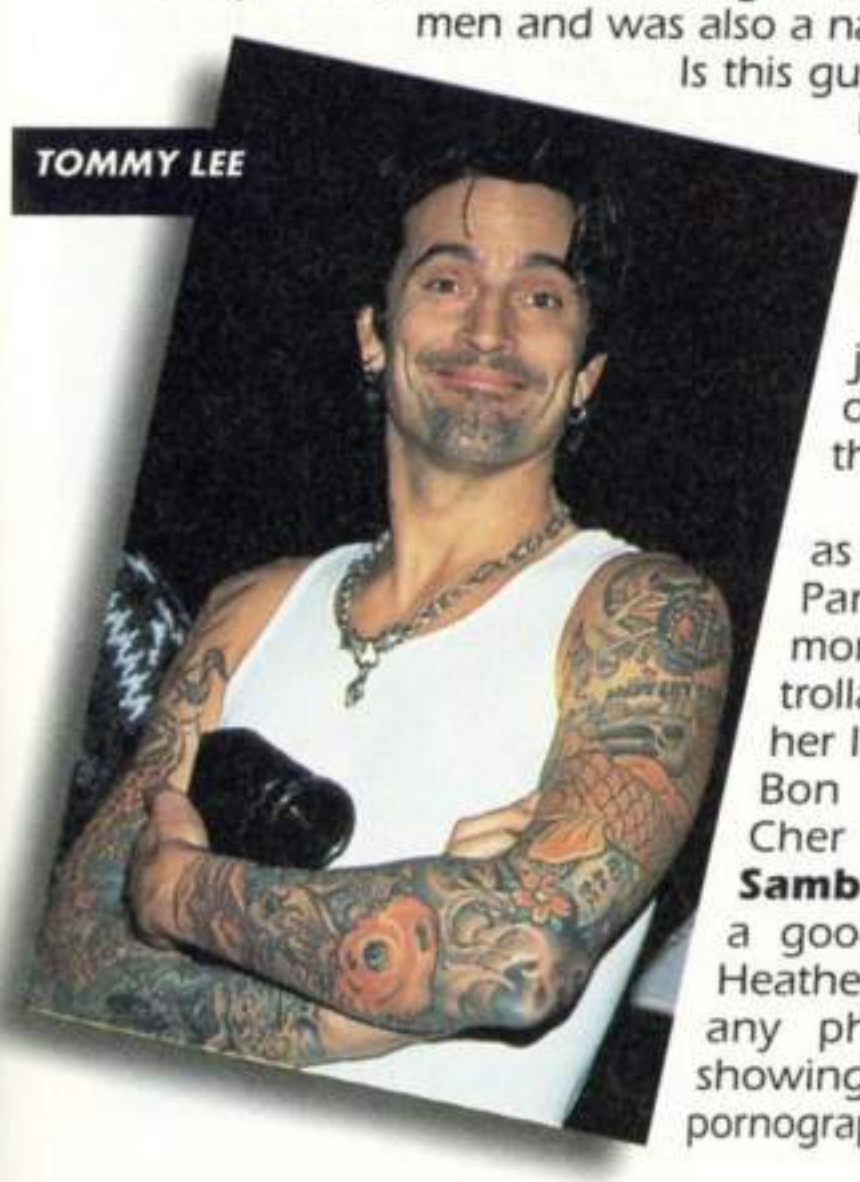
Once they were in her hotel room, she had him strip to gauge his size and away they went on a four-day binge of fucking and drinking that ended with them getting married on Feb. 19.

They continued their non-stop fucking in her trailer on the movie set for "Barb Wire," resulting in her exhilarated pregnancy, ratcheting her sex drive to white hot. Tommy's full-time job now was keeping his excitingly long cock thrusting deep inside her day and night.

But even the birth of their son, Brandon, could not keep Tommy from thinking with his prick when it came to the previous men in Pam's life. When he saw photos of her previous beaus in a bar, he smashed them and started beating her, compelling her to flee with their son and file, if only momentarily, for divorce.

HEATHER LOCKLEAR: ROCK 'N' ROLLS WITH BIG COCKS ONLY

Though Heather dearly loved Tommy for his big dick and expert fucking, she dumped him for the same reason he had Pam fleeing from him: his raging temper over the thought that any woman he was fucking had previously laid other men and was also a national sex object.



TOMMY LEE

Is this guy a psychotic egomaniac or what? He marries women who are huge TV stars and expects that men will stop jacking off over them once he marries them? Get real.

Although Heather is as sexually insatiable as Pam, she needed a more sedate and controllable hung rocker in her life. She found him in Bon Jovi guitarist and Cher ex-beau Richie Sambora, who measures a good 9x6. Unlike Pam, Heather hasn't taken or left any photos lying around showing her and Richie in pornographic poses. D

WONDER BREAD AND ECSTASY: THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JOEY STEFANO

By Charles Isherwood
Alyson Publications, Los Angeles, CA, $11.95 (soft cover)

"Wonder Bread and Ecstasy" doesn't break new ground as an expose of the sleazy side of gay porn. What it does do is give us an honest, stark look at the business and particularly at the people who are involved in it. In doing so, it also exonerates, to a degree, the porn movie business from the often chaotic, sometimes tragic lives of its stars.

As soon as the 1994 drug overdose death of 26-year-old gay superstar Joey Stefano was announced, the media was all over the story. "Is the sex industry to blame for the death of this young star?" one announcer asked as a promo for The Marilyn Kagan Show. Kagan, a radio psychotherapist on Los Angeles' Channel 9, was one of the first TV hosts to begin exploiting the topics of sex, drugs and other scandals among Tinseltown celebrities.

On the talk show, the untimely demise of Stefano as well as that of the beautiful, straight porn diva Savannah (a suicide by gunshot) was discussed, debated and chewed over by the hostess and her guests.

The show's theme: Is there a connection between drugs, porn and suicide? The conclusion was vague. The direct effect of pornography on either drugs or suicide is probably pure conjecture. If there were such a connection, there'd probably be no more porn stars around.

"Wonder Bread and Ecstasy" makes clear the reality that Joey Stefano was a disturbed and self-destructive young man from the very beginning. Long before he made his debut and spectacular rise to the top of the industry as the very first "bottom" to achieve super-stardom, Stefano, (born Nicholas Iocona in Philadelphia,) was addicted to drugs, sex and living on the edge.

And while this may be the criteria for many of the young men and women in porn, it certainly isn't a prerequisite. There are those who succeed in the business without destroying themselves—any more than their environments have already damaged them—and even those who make a lot of money and retire often settle down and leave their careers behind.

Of course, in the minds of Middle America, sex and money—those two cornerstones of human existence—aren't supposed to be connected. Many Americans like to believe that sex is one area where capitalism doesn't belong, so people who make a living off sex-and, to a degree, their employers (like Heidi Fleiss) and customers (like Hugh Grant)—are reserved for special contempt.

And so the lives of people who make their living in porn are trivialized, and when they die, their tragic deaths are sensationalized and most of society blames their professions rather than the culture that produces so much neurosis and dysfunction.

Joey Stefano was young, he was beautiful and he was gay. He was addicted to sex and to chasing the American dream. He was also profoundly disturbed to the point where he eventually couldn't function without drugs and it was the drugs, not the sex or the porno, which killed him.

His story is sad. If you're looking for sensationalism or titillation, you won't find it in "Wonder Bread And Ecstasy." This is the story of a young man from a poor background who, because of nature's blessings, was able to pursue—but never find—happiness in one of the few avenues open for such a kid.

His personal demons—and we'll never know what they were exactly, even though the book tries to enlighten us—eventually led to his drug overdose in a sleazy motel. A much-too-short life that caught on fire, burned hot and then was snuffed out so all that remained was a pitiful puff of smoke. D

AN INSIDE SOURCE FOR TODAY'S GAY TRAVELER

Exposing The Saints and The Sinners

COLUMN BY ROBERT DALLAS

"This is just great...it's my last night here and now I find the place with all the hot men!"

Sound like a familiar lament? First-time or even repeat visits to any destination can push even the most savvy gay traveler to the edge. It will test even the loftiest levels of endurance and tax your last gay nerve-not to mention your bank account.

In "Dude Destinations," I'll tell you the good, the bad and the ugly aspects of both popular and obscure destinations for today's gay traveler.

I am by no means a member of the jet set, but I have sat on my share of jets—or should I say "have been seated on?" For 15 years I criss-crossed most of North America as a "ball-bearing waitress" (a.k.a. flight attendant) for Eastern Air Lines [RIP].

During those years, I spent a disgusting amount of time and money searching for bars and clubs that closed a week after my handy travel guide went to press.

Sure, there were a few occasions when my little book was right on target and I found the listed establishment right where it was supposed to be. But more often than not those finds supported the axiom of blind justice. Were she not blind, they too would have been closed.

Pocket guides serve a splendid function for the unexpected or overnight travel, but have no purpose when planning a once-in-a-lifetime trip or even an extended weekend.

In each issue of DUDE, I'll supply you with hands-on (if I'm lucky!) information and commentary on a wide range of gay and gay-friendly destinations personally visited and unannounced.

Writing as Robert Dallas while traveling under my real name gives me the anonymity I need to provide you with an unbiased rating of facilities, service, clientele and honest value for your travel dollar.

We've all seen the slick ad layouts in gay magazines that purport to tout the latest gay travel destinations. Well, I've subscribed to one well-known publication for 11 years and I see the same advertisements that I saw in the first issue.

So here's the point to all of this: seeing is believing and word of mouth are your best sources of gay travel information.

Sometimes getting there can be half the fun. On one or two occasions, it may have been all the fun. Obviously, your destination will determine your mode of transportation. In each issue, I'll tell you the latest transportation options and tips about package deals or why a-la-carte arrangements might be better and less expensive.

Some package itineraries can sound like a dream-come-true and turn out to be your worst nightmare. Oh, sure, it's great bar talk: "Scott and I went here and there and did this and that [gasp] and saw this statue and that palace and"...and in reality spent precious time packing and unpacking. That's not a vacation. It's an ordeal!

This reminds me of a little axiom from my days at Eastern: "We don't have time to do it right, but we have time to do it over." Well, guys, we all know how that trip ended!

I'll also offer some suggestions about points of interest en-route (no, not truck stops!) and nearby places that are well worth a visit. Of course, if I can't find any, I won't bother mentioning them.

At the beginning of each column, you'll find a boxed area with all the vital information about the latest victim...I mean, subject, of my travels. It will contain the usual stuff: address, phone, type of accommodations, you get the drift. You'll also see our rating scale. The scale has four levels, each represented by a rainbow flag:

One Flag - Pass on it
Two Flags - Iffy
Three Flags - Good time
Four Flags - A must

In the meantime, I'm anxious to hear about places you have been or would like to visit. I welcome all suggestions about places you would like me to review.

In the next issue of DUDE, I'll take you to the Provincetown of the South—Key West, Florida. You'll get the "down and dirty" on four of the Conch Republic's hottest gay guest house resorts. Don't miss it! D

BUFFED 'N' READY

COLUMN BY TODD SCHAFER

You find fitness converts everywhere these days. Ten years ago or so, I was being told that I was wasting my time on a fad.

"If you want a workout," my father would say half-jokingly, "I've got some work for you!"

Dad was talking about ranch-related activities, and though wholesome and sweat-producing, they're not quite the same.

My brother and I explained this to him on a few occasions. I knew that what I was doing in the weight room was changing my body, and that I liked it for a number of reasons, so it didn't matter if it would prove to be a fad or not. Time would tell, but it made no difference to me at that time.

Today most people believe that the effects of exercise are real and beneficial. Not everyone has benefited but we all probably know someone who has. Scientific studies, commercialism and others who've shared my experience have turned the fad into something lasting. And slowly, I suspect, our culture will shed the quick-fix mentality to weight loss and physical ailments and instead, embrace exercise, nutrition and their positive effects as fundamental to "living."

Taking it a step further, I think that society's view about health, prevention and traditional medical treatment will shift, with exercise and proper nutrition being a part of a more effective holistic health approach.

Parenthetically, although free enterprise is at the root of this country's greatness, commercialism has sometimes inhibited progress, with healthcare being one prime example. But getting back to the subject....

A question that enters my mind now and then is, "How can so many people be so uninformed about nutrition and exercise?"

The fitness movement is booming, but I meet people all the time who ask about things that I always thought were common knowledge. I suppose that's the reason for so many health and fitness-related magazines...and the reason that I intend to provide something for everyone in this column, from beginner exerciser to the more advanced.

While there are many ways to exercise, the best method is to find an activity that you enjoy and find effective. Some form of pure cardiovascular, strength and flexibility training is recommended for becoming healthy and fit.

Whether you exercise by jogging and doing calisthenics in the park, or go to a fitness center to work out on a treadmill and weight-lifting equipment, the benefits can be the same.

The first important step in starting an exercise program is, quite simply, to do something. You don't have to go to a fitness facility, but it's probably the best way to begin. The environment found here makes you focus your attention on exercise, plus the equipment is of better quality. Chances are that a fitness center will provide better and faster results, though finding one that you're comfortable with may be essential to your progress.

If you want to work out at home, its best to set aside a time when you won't answer the phone or allow other distractions.

Also, it makes sense to obtain sufficient equipment to provide for an effective workout. If you're going to spend the time, energy and money, you may as well make it effective.

Sad to say there is some home equipment on the market that makes exercising with it almost worse than doing nothing. Due to improper design or construction, working out on some equipment can be awkward, and the person may get the impression that exercise is too hard or unpleasant. Oftentimes this results in that person swearing off all exercise in the future.

Generally, good health and fitness will result from basic exercise and good nutrition. If you want to go beyond generally good health and fitness, then an important thing to remember is that different people will require different workouts, depending on body type, physical condition, metabolic rate and fitness goal.

While I personally don't have to do much of the typical aerobic exercise to stay lean as long as I eat a certain way, others may require mostly aerobic exercise. And a more athletic body type may build muscle easily, while others have to work out intensely to get the same muscular build.

As a personal fitness trainer, I have coached many men from a beginning to an advanced fitness level. Though they had various body types, goals and so on, I've found that the most successful strategy is to give them a basic workout that doesn't frustrate them or seem too difficult.

After the basics are mastered, the next step in the progression is begun. I happen to think that it is one of the best approaches to getting beginners in shape. It works because it gives them a very simple, basic progression to follow, and you advance when you are comfortable. I'll provide this routine in my next column in the Dec. '97 DUDE.

Enough emphasis can't be placed on learning the proper way to perform the exercises. Doing so will dramatically enhance your progress, regardless of your goal.

My brother and I used to perform bench presses by bouncing the bar off our chests to reverse directions as we began to push the weight up.

One time, an experienced-looking bodybuilder came over to us and suggested that we try using lighter weights and pause on our chest before we push the weight up. He said that we'd feel weaker at first and might not like using lighter weight, but that in two weeks we'd be lifting more than the heaviest weight we were lifting using our technique. He was right. I've paid close attention to proper form ever since.

In addition, performing exercises in a manner that allows for the fastest strength increases also happens to be the safest method. And you'll more fully understand what the exercise is supposed to make the muscle feel like. "Feel" is a key term here.

Concentration on proper form while learning an exercise will allow you to focus on the physical sensation you should feel, similar to learning a golf or tennis racquet swing.

But using proper mechanics for the motion is essential to understanding the sensation. When you understand the sensation,, you'll be able to duplicate it faster when you change something about your workout, making a new workout effective right away.

Besides making your workouts more effective, understanding muscular sensations will enable you to go to any gym, sit down on a foreign-looking piece of equipment and do two repetitions of the exercise to determine whether it was designed and constructed properly.

As I mentioned earlier, home equipment usually isn't the best due to improper design or construction or both. Most people who buy home exercise equipment don't know what their muscles should be feeling, so they assume that what they're feeling is proper. It's usually not.

Next time....a weightlifting routine and basic nutrition. D

CUCKOO FOR COSTA RICA

BREATH-TAKING SCENERY, TASTY CUISINE—AND GORGEOUS GUYS—MAKE THE 'SWITZERLAND OF CENTRAL AMERICA' A TRAVEL HOT SPOT FOR GAY DUDES WORLDWIDE

ARTICLE BY FRANK DECATUR

To describe Costa Rica as the "Switzerland of Central America" might be a bit of a stretch, but that is how this small country—bordered on the south by Panama and the north by Nicaragua—has been described in numerous books and articles.

Costa Rica is indeed mountainous, but it is tropical to the very top of its highest mountain peaks, which do not begin to compare to the Alps.

And, true, Costa Ricans are industrious, well-educated and the country is largely rural. There are goats and sheep and cattle too, but not a Heidi or a yodeler to be found anywhere.

Costa Rica is Latin to its core. The similarity to Switzerland—such as it is—is in the country's political stability, its neutrality and its position as the financial and banking center of Central America.

Because, historically, there has always been so much political chaos throughout Central America, at the slightest rumbling of another revoluccion those with means immediately stash their money in Costa Rica's banks. The country is definitely not a Banana Republic. It is a stable, constitutional democracy.

Under its constitution, Costa Rica does not have an army. And because it doesn't spend billions of colones on defense, it has the highest standard of living in Central America. This includes compulsory education—accounting for the highest literacy rate in Central America-and there's cradle to the grave universal medical insurance.

To call Costa Rica a "gay paradise" might be a bit of an exaggeration too, but upon visiting there I learned that might be a better description of the country. Unlike its neighbors, Costa Rica has a surprisingly tolerant attitude toward gays—both native and tourist.

My first visit to Costa Rica was 10 years ago. At the urging of two friends and the offer of a free plane ticket on LACSA, I agreed to go, even though I knew nothing about the country. I didn't even know for sure where Costa Rica was located. I therefore had no fantasies about finding some kind of swinging gay mecca.

Having traveled to other Central American countries, I knew that the prevailing attitude in these overwhelmingly catholic and machismo countries is definitely anti-gay. This also makes for an abundance of closeted, frustrated gays as well as a plethora of bugarones (often married guys who are adamantly straight but like to bugger other men, especially young gays. Go figure)!

My friends had never been to Costa Rica either, and had no information other than having heard that the country was very scenic, U.S.-friendly, that the government there was very liberal and stable and that the country was becoming a haven for retirees from the States because of the climate, the relatively low cost of living and a very aggressive campaign to lure Americans to live there.

A couple of their gay friends had also visited and had reported that they had a great time—meaning that they'd probably made some gay contacts in the country.

although Tony, my friend, had not pumped them for more specifics. So we were pretty much on our own.

My initial impression upon arriving at the airport in Costa Rica's capital, San Jose, was not entirely favorable. The place had the look, the feel and the somewhat squalid appearance of other airports in third world countries. I did notice that there were relatively few souvenir hawkers and no beggars hanging around the baggage and taxi stands.

The trip from the airport to the hotel was short, but there was a lot of traffic on the modern expressway. There was nothing cohesive or uniquely Costa Rican in the sights we passed. Some of the buildings were large and modern; others, run-down and ugly. There were neon signs and billboards of all shapes and sizes along the highway and the sidewalks were tilted and bumpy, appearing and disappearing from block to block, helter-skelter.

There was in San Jose, as in all of Latin America, the pervasive odor of diesel smoke, but between the trucks and buses belching out black fumes, the air seemed pleasant and cool. San Jose is situated 6,000 feet above sea-level but is so close to the equator that it can be very humid during the day and rainy, so take both a cap and an umbrella.

Our hotel, the Petit Victoria, was a pleasant surprise. It is a small, restored Victorian Hotel filled with authentic, somewhat cumbersome antiques, tile and oriental rugs.

The concierge and bell boys were efficient and polite and in almost no time we were taken to our rooms, which proved to be equally attractive and efficiently laid out. The bathrooms were clean and there was hot water in abundance (that is after I discovered that the unmarked faucets were in reverse position to those in the U.S.)

As soon as our luggage was unpacked, I turned to the Fodor's guide which I had purchased the day before and we studied the layout of the city. We were soon on our way to the main square, the Plaza de la Cultura, where we knew we'd get some idea of the pulse of the city.

We had lunch at the outdoor cafe' of the Gran Hotel Costa Rica, a grand old hotel indeed which overlooks the plaza and the wonderful miniature opera house, the Teatro Nacional, constructed in the late 1800's and (modestly) modeled after the opera house in Paris.

Lunch was surprisingly good. The food is fresh, fruits and vegetables are safe to eat and even water from the tap, I was told, is drinkable. (Because of a disastrous experience in Mexico, I drink only bottled water when traveling).

The basic Costa Rican dish is gallo pinto (beans and rice) and to this is added either fresh fish or beef and a salad. Costa Rican beef (a major export), is excellent. The ceviche, an appetizer of pickled raw fish in a zesty vinegar and herb marinade, was wonderful, and the home-made hot bread reminded me of the irresistible petit pan of France.

Costa Rican coffee is unexcelled and the cafe' con leche was a fitting end to a very good lunch. Ice cream, flan or arroz con leche are the standard desserts, as they are in most Latin American countries.

What became immediately apparent to the three of us, and far more interesting than lunch, were the considerable numbers of young gay guys strolling around the square and sauntering languidly past the cafe'. They were not only attractive, for the most part, but were obviously friendly, flashing white-toothed smiles and giving us that "look" that cannot be missed nor misinterpreted.

What we also noticed was that a percentage of them were distinctly non-Latin in appearance. None of them had that waif look (sorry, those of you who like that sort of thing), but were well dressed and even preppie in appearance.

There were a number of them with blue eyes and even a few blonds among the strollers, and very few of the boys who looked Indian. I was later told that there were no indigenous native Indians left alive after the Spanish conquest of this area and thus no cross-breeding with the Spanish.

Later, there was a considerable influx of both Germans and Italians who immigrated to Costa Rica and established farms and coffee and banana plantations. They did intermarry with the Spanish, creating a unique and often exotic-look among the populace.

Plucking up our courage, we sat on a bench in the square where there were a considerable number of vendors selling clay whistles and fake pre-Colombian artifacts. My friend, who speaks fluent Spanish—unusual for a gringo—invited one of the more comely lads to sit for a chat. We quickly learned that there was indeed a thriving gay culture in Costa Rica, particularly in San Jose. The young man also told us to be careful of hustlers.

"Many bad guys came from Nicaragua," he said, "and now we have problems. They will go with you and then steal from you and many of them are pick-pockets and purse snatchers so be careful in the streets, also."

Costa Rica did have a large influx of refugees from Nicaragua which, unfortunately, has changed the gay landscape, and not for the better. But even with this dire warning, absolutely nothing untoward happened to any of us during our forays into the gay day-and-night life of the city.

On a subsequent visit I was told by an expatriate American gay living in a finca (farm house) outside San Jose that many of the young men will tell a tourist horror stories to get you to engage him as your guide and protector during your stay, for which you're expected to pay him a fee as well as pick up his lunch and dinner expenses.

"Besides," he told me, "if you meet someone and want to go with him but have suspicions, ask to see his cedula."

"Cedula?" I asked.

"It's the national identity card all Costa Ricans are issued and must carry when they turn 18. If he doesn't have one, leave him alone. He's either under-age or he's an illegal."

At the young Costa Rican's suggestion we agreed to meet him that evening after dinner for a visit to some of the clubs in the city. He also told us that there were two bathhouses which were a lot of fun. He was right.

One is the LeBlon, which has a quiet atmosphere, gymnasium and lounge in addition to a sauna. The cruising is fine on weekends but the place is sparsely attended during the week. The other, Decameron, is a very small place with only a lounge, sauna and a masseur is available, but it's very active. Both establishments were closed down for a time during the country's anti-AIDS campaign, but they're now open again.

On the way back to the hotel, we walked through the lush, green and well-tended Parque Nacional in the center of the city. With our new awareness that there were a lot of gays in San Jose, I made eye contact with a number of guys who smiled coquettishly.

But the day was young and our new friend's warnings were still reverberating in my ear, so I smiled back and went to the hotel for a nap. On the way to the hotel I noticed that there were fast food joints like McDonald's and Kentucky Fried Chicken and Taco Bell in downtown San Jose. Yep, U.S. culture is everywhere! Fast food will probably be America's most memorable contribution to the planet.

The most interesting of the bars we visited that evening, after a very good dinner in the hotel (chicken baked in a spicy tomato sauce, fresh vegetables, bread and flan) was the DeJaVu.

Unlike many Latin countries, night life festivities begin early in San Jose. We arrived at about 9:30 (with our Costa Rican in tow who, hereafter will be called Marco) and the place was already jumping. There was a mixed crowd of ages and sexes and shades of color from very dark to very fair and everyone was well dressed. The admission was about $4 and I was told it's higher on weekends.

The disco music was loud and everyone seemed to be very friendly. What the ratio of gay-to-straight was I couldn't tell, but it was obvious from the guy/guy and the girl/girl pairings on the dance floor that the place was definitely gay, although there were also some straight couples who looked completely comfortable dancing and cuddling at the bar.

I talked to a number of young guys who were flirtatious, friendly and very outgoing. Marco disappeared for awhile and returned with a couple of women he introduced to us who were lovers of 10 years, they told us. The gay and lesbian community in Costa Rica is very cohesive, it would seem. They go to bars together, socialize and seem comfortable with each other, at least in public.

There are a large number of clubs, bars and discos in San Jose. They all have one thing in common: they are mixed. Like today in the U.S., where there are few "exclusive" bars catering either to gays or lesbians, all of the bars in San Jose have a mixed crowd and they all appear to have a smattering of straight customers.

There are those clubs with a mixed social class, like Los Cucharones, which has working men and women of all ages and some hustlers, but everyone is friendly and, if you are careful, you can figure out who's pay for play and who isn't.

El Pucho o El Churro Espanol features Latin and American music and most of the clientele are students or workers. It's a very friendly place—but there's no dancing.

La Avispa used to be an exclusively lesbian bar but now it's mixed. There's a pool table and an outdoor patio and the place has a dicey reputation, so be careful who you pick up there. Lots of hustlers.

Space doesn't permit a listing of the dozen or so places currently in full swing, but once you visit one of the places you'll soon be touted on to what's new and what's fun and where the action is. If, like us, you can find a local who will be willing to be your guide, it's the easier way to get to know San Jose by night.

By day, there's the Museo Nacional on a hillside with a panoramic view of the city. Inside there are wonderfully restored rooms of colonial Costa Rica, a king's ransom in Pre-Colombian gold, many Pre-Colombian clay artifacts and a historical gallery of portraits of Costa Rica's venerable leaders right up until today.

The gardens of the museum are charming and it's a great place to spend an hour or so soaking up the tranquillity of the place. Under the Plaza de Cultura there is another museum which houses the most impressive collection of Incan gold one could imagine. It's very impressive and well worth the visit (and admission to the museums as well as the Teatro Nacional is a mere pittance).

Sadly, the "Jungle Train" from San Jose to Limon, on the West Coast, is no longer in service. This narrow-gauge railroad was built in the late 1800's to carry bananas and coffee from the rich highlands to the port city of Limon.

Today, most of the produce is trucked from the plantations to the coast or flown by air, and the quaint old railroad became a popular tourist attraction. You would board the train in downtown San Jose at 11:00 a.m. along with lots of passengers, mostly farmers and plantation workers who'd been to the city for a day. The tiny train with its open windows, protected only by pull-down tropical shutters, would puff its way out of the city and up into the mountains, stopping every half-hour or so at some small village or town along the way.

The train moved slowly and you could lounge on the platform between the cars or sit on the steps and have your heart jump into your mouth when the train passed over a canyon hundreds of feet deep and you looked down to see a thread-wide river below you.

The train would eventually reach the crest of the mountains, having passed through thousands of acres of forest, banana and coffee plantations. You'd have seen monkeys swinging in the trees, beautiful parrots squawking at you as you passed and poor people sitting on the steps of their tiny thatched houses, waving languidly to you.

Then you descended through the rain forest and down onto the flat open plains where wheat and corn and cattle abound. We had the hotel chef pack us a lunch of sandwiches and fruit and, for about $2, we traveled for about five hours, departing the train half-way to Limon.

We then walked to the downtown bus station where we caught a bus back to San Jose—another fun trip sitting with a bus full of Ticos (a name the Costa Ricans proudly call themselves)—as the somewhat antiquated bus belches and creaks its way up winding, steep roads back to the city, passing through the lovely second-city of Cartago along the way.

I suppose one could take a bus both ways, but the jungle train trip was a wonderful way to acquaint oneself with the Costa Ricans and their countryside.

You can also visit the country's most famous landmark Irazu volcano, which is east of Cartago. For 25 cents you can take a bus the 20 miles to Cartago (or you can spend $20 on a cab), visit the beautiful cathedral there—unlike the one in San Jose which is run-down and sadly neglected—and see its riches accumulated from the fervor of desperate people who believe that the waters beneath the cathedral can cure any and all ills.

And, as with almost every place in the country, you'll see handsome young men in abundance who will smile at you in that special way and make you wish you could gather a planeload of them and import them to your palatial estate back home.

You might get lucky, as I did on the trip back from the Jungle Train, and be seated next to a handsome student who decides it's a lot of fun to play footsie with you for an hour or so until you're ready to scream and tear his clothes off right there on the bus.

From Cartago you can get a taxi to take you up the mountain to the mouth of the famous volcano which, over the centuries, has wreaked havoc around the countryside. You'll see the lava-buried ruins of many towns on the trip from San Jose to Cartago.

The volcano is an eerie place—silent and sullen with no signs of vegetation anywhere and the smell of sulfur strong in your nostrils as you approach the rim. You look down into the bubbling mass and the spiraling smoke in the bowels of the mountain and wonder if you'll make it back to the city before it suddenly erupts in a deadly display of nature's unbounded force.

The neighboring cities around San Jose have no organized gay life to speak of. Most of the gay residents we met rely on frequent trips to the capital for their fun and assignations. Cartago is a clean, neat and sleepy tropical city where, once you leave the throngs at the cathedral, you rarely see anyone walking around in the heat of the day. There are some tavernas and restaurants where, I suppose, there's some activity at night.

On a subsequent visit to Costa Rica, I was introduced to a very nice young guy in San Jose who lived in Cartago with his parents. Six of us—three Americans and three Costa Ricans—all traveled by bus to a resort east of the city.

We swam in a huge municipal pool and then hiked up into the foothills and spent an hour or so lying in a shaded spot on the edge of a coffee field. My Spanish is limited and the Tico dialect didn't help my comprehension much but we did manage to make ourselves understood in an elementary way.

I was shy, the Cartagoan boy was shy and so nothing much happened—until we boarded the bus back to Cartago where we were to leave him and catch another bus to San Jose. On the bus we became "cozy," discreetly holding hands for the hour ride.

Our connecting bus was an hour later and so, at his insistence, we walked to his neat, modern home in Cartago where he introduced us to his family, his mother, sisters and little brother.

His ancient grandmother hobbled back and forth to the kitchen many times to show us various vegetables which she'd grown in her garden and explain to us what they were and all about them. We sat and drank soda, smiled, nodded and commented on the vegetables and then the young man asked me to come to his room. He wanted to show me something, he said.

He hurriedly latched his bedroom door and we grabbed each other in a torrid embrace, kissing and fondling and exploring each other's mouths and tongues and bodies through our clothes.

He became nervous and I was already near panic and so we forced ourselves into a state of composure and returned to the living room. We left shortly thereafter and I never saw the guy again.

Damn! Why didn't I do something when we were lying next to each other under the trees? Oh, well...maybe next trip! D

HITCHIN' A RIDE

You don't find good-lookin' dudes like Josh every day. So imagine the reaction of motorists along this sparsely traveled Arizona highway when they spot ted this 5'10", 170-pound stud puppy thumbing for a ride. "Probably a little surprised," admits this 25-year-old sporting goods salesman from Tucson who hitchhikes on his weekends as a way to satisfy his craving for adventure. "I guess you could say I'm a thrill-seeker at heart. But actually, I've met all sorts of people this way—some who were really superficial and pushy and others who turn me on and I've gotten it on with." Hitching a ride isn't always easy, though. Sometimes Josh has to go that extra mile—like showing off his awesome butt and hard tool to passersby. "I'll even strip all the way sometimes," Josh admits, "if it's not too hot out here. Hey, everybody needs a little push sometimes."

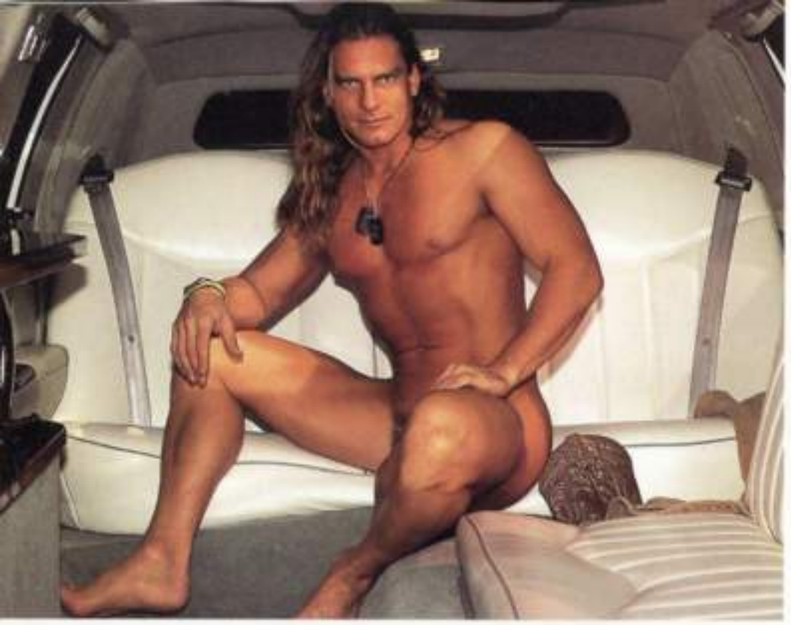
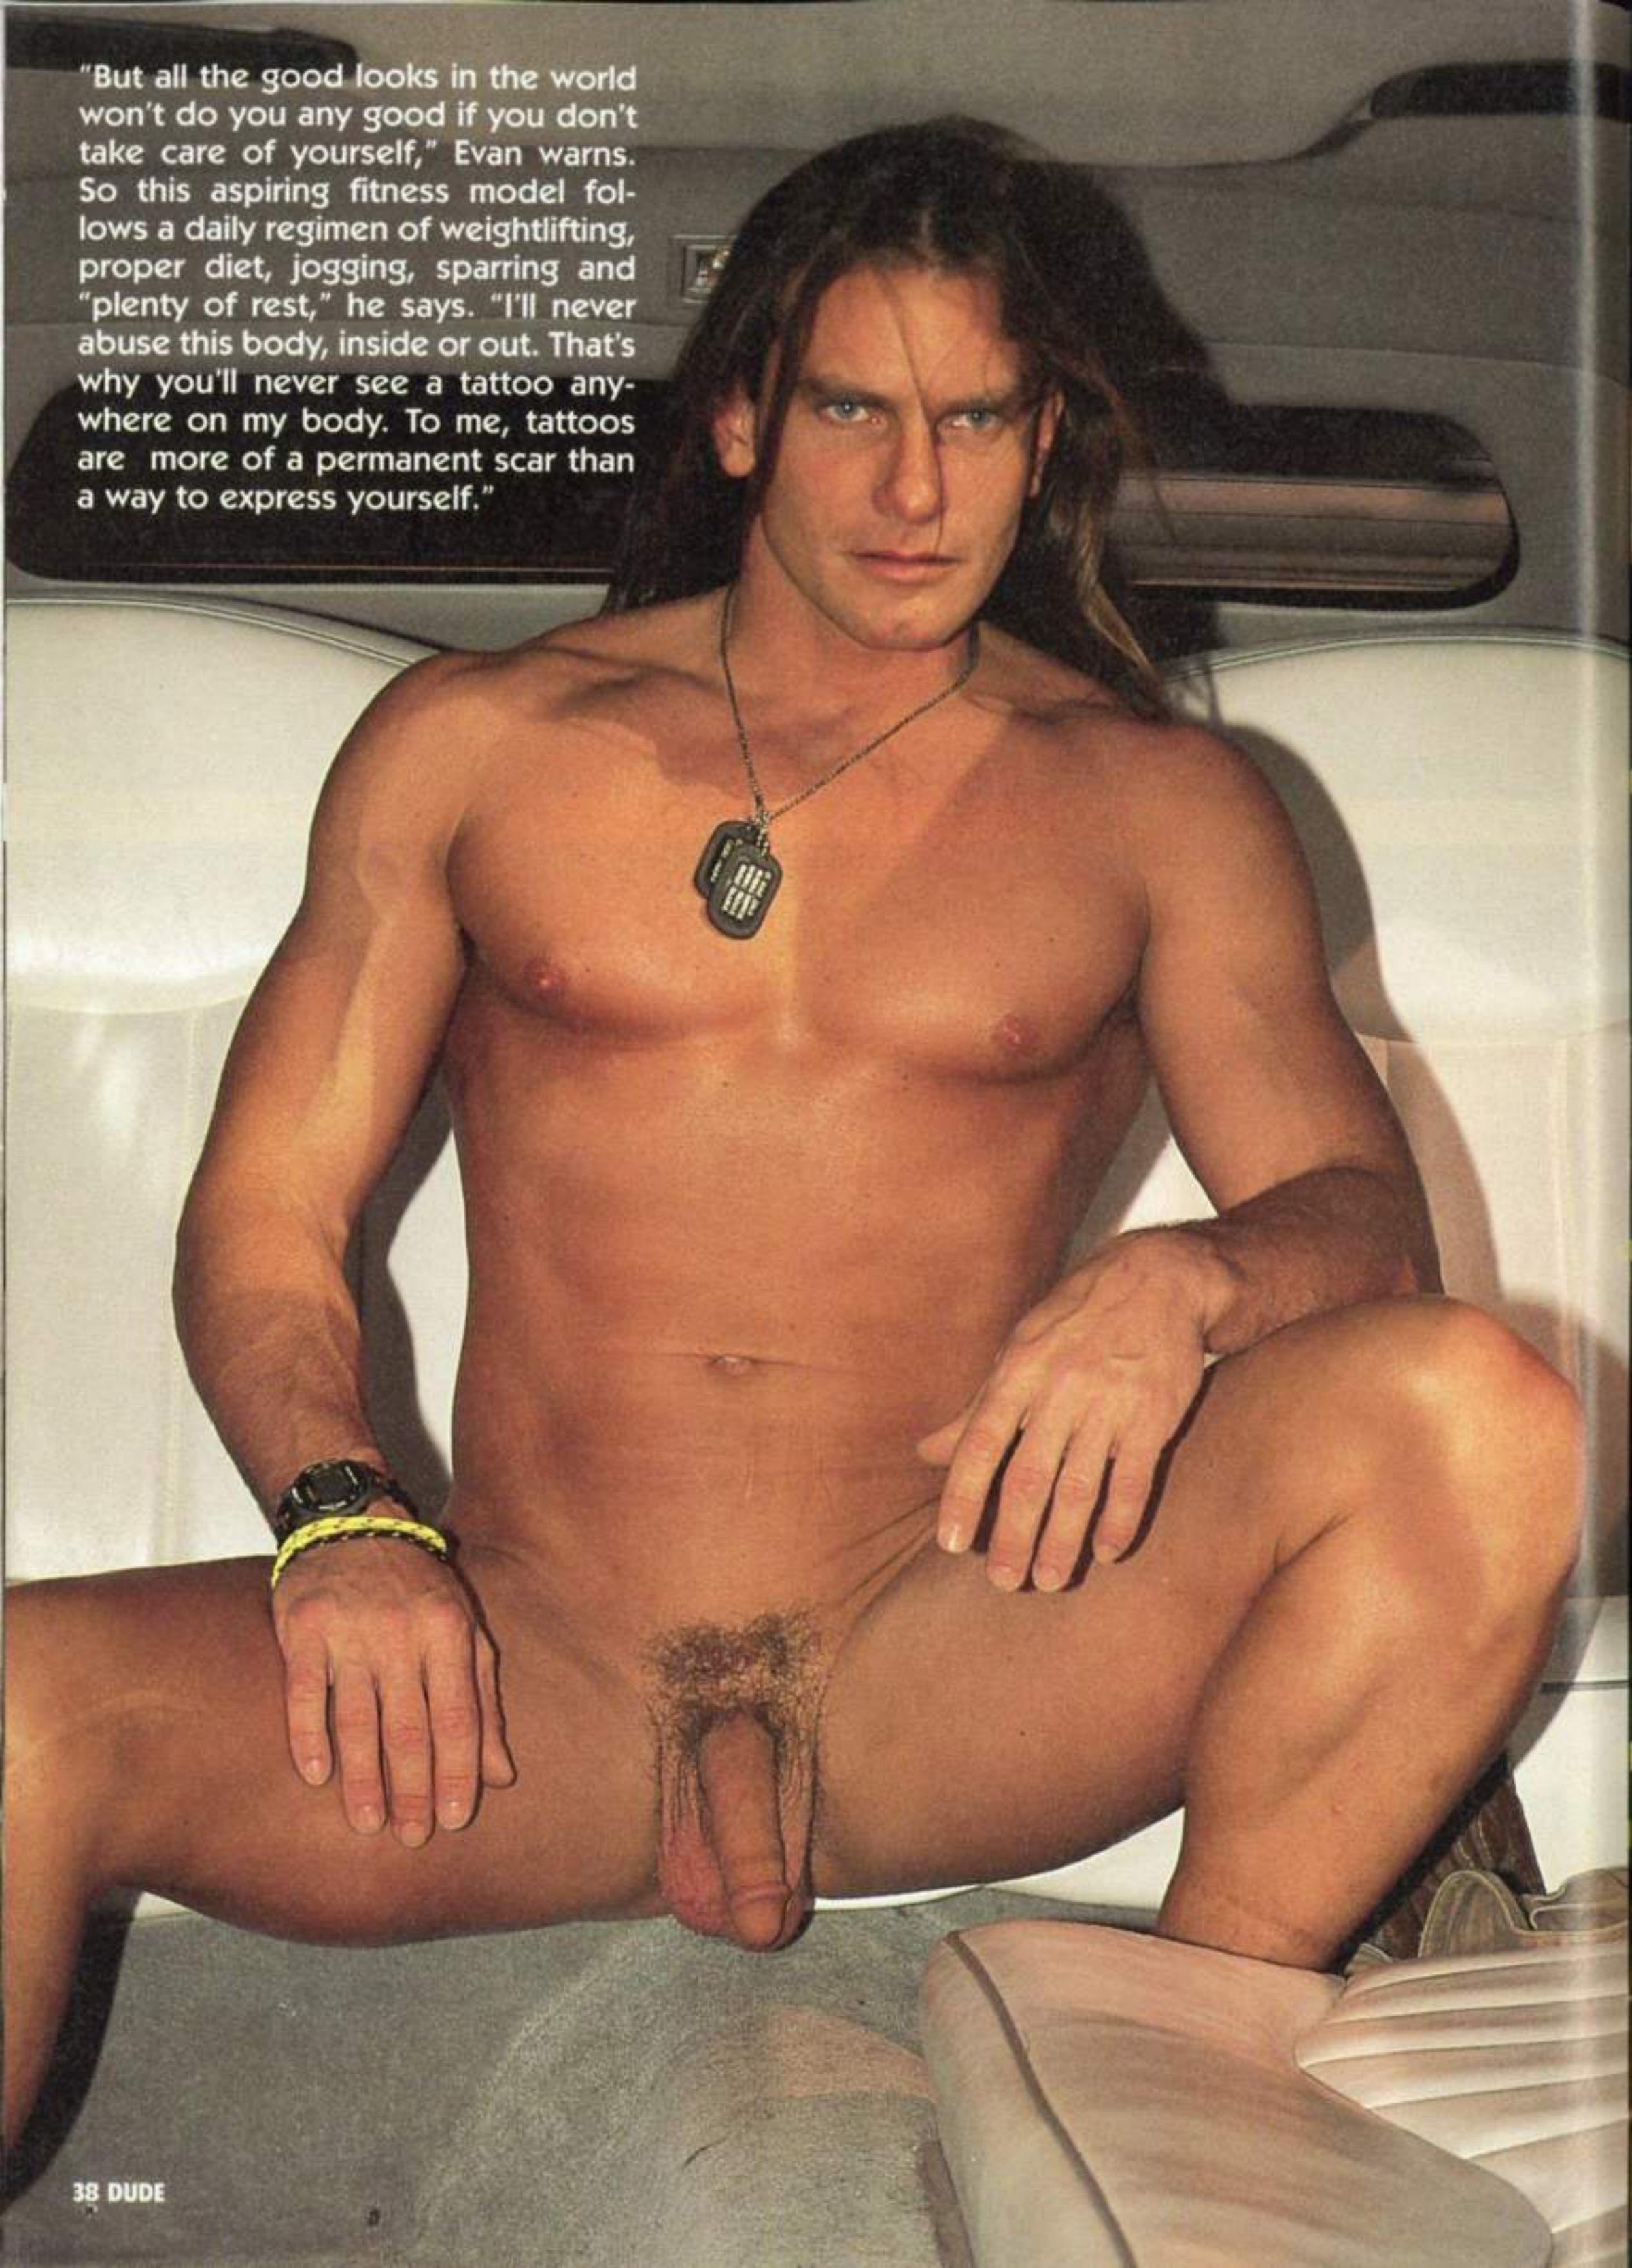
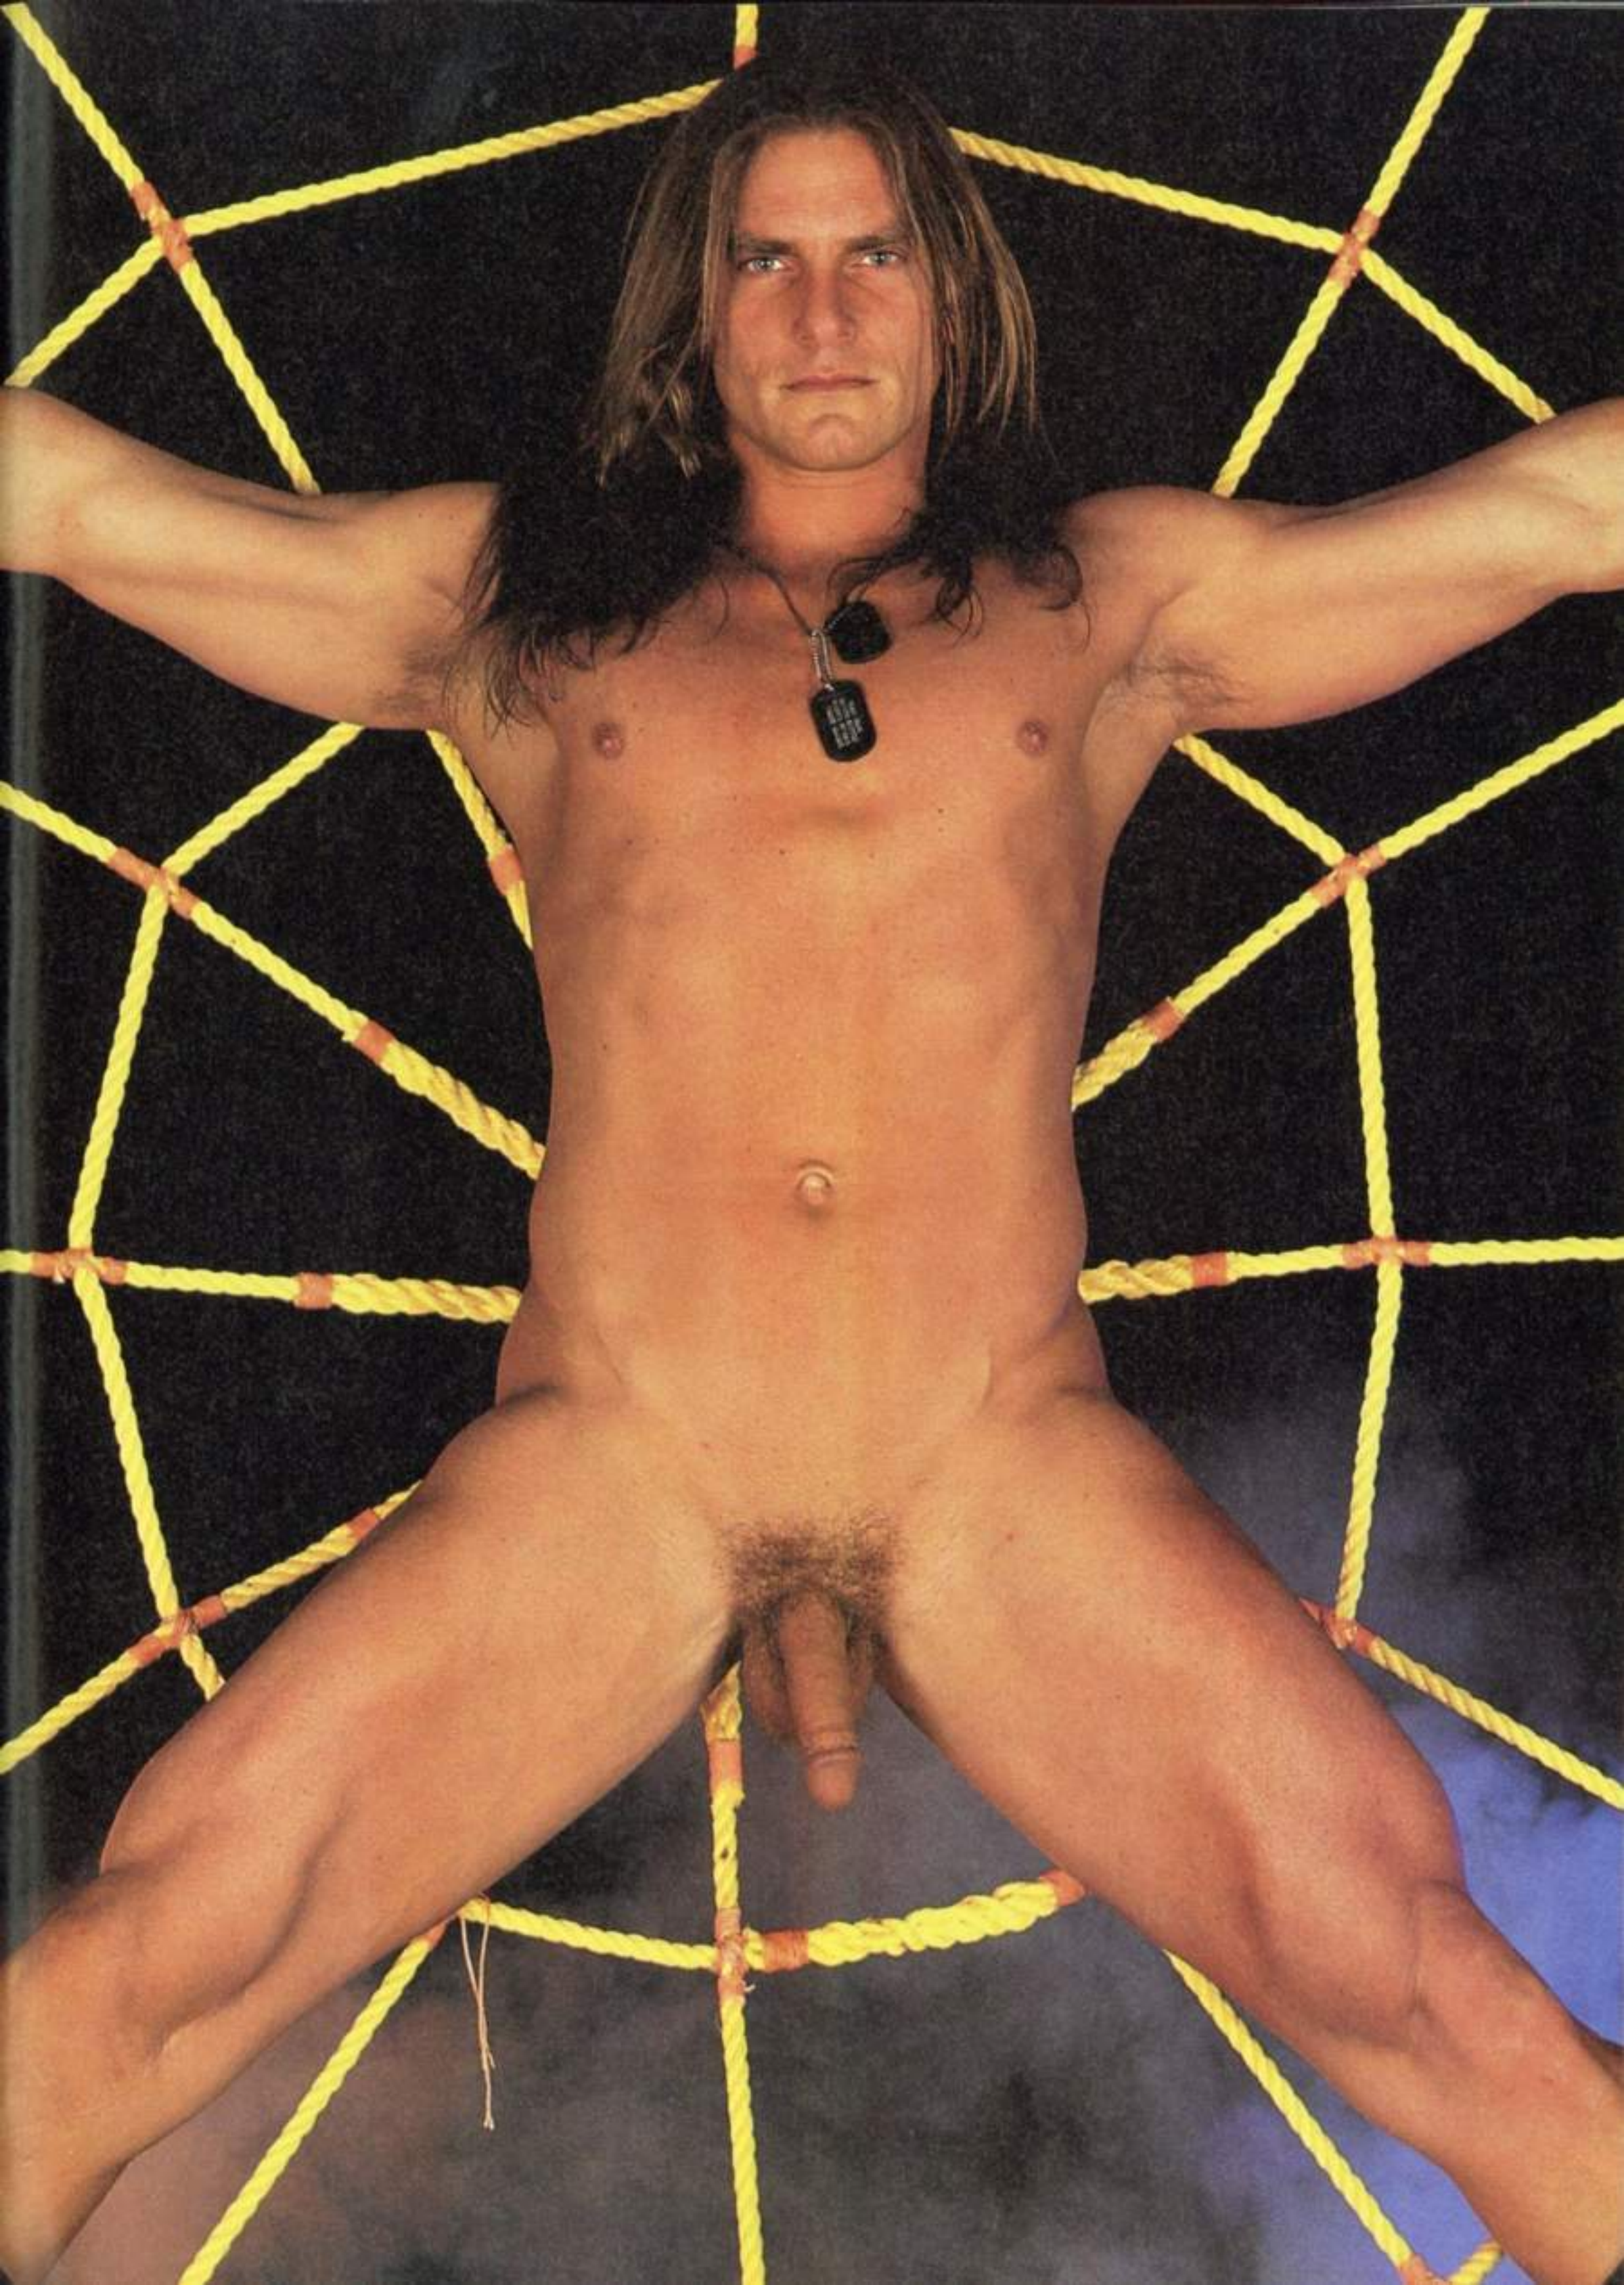
Klein

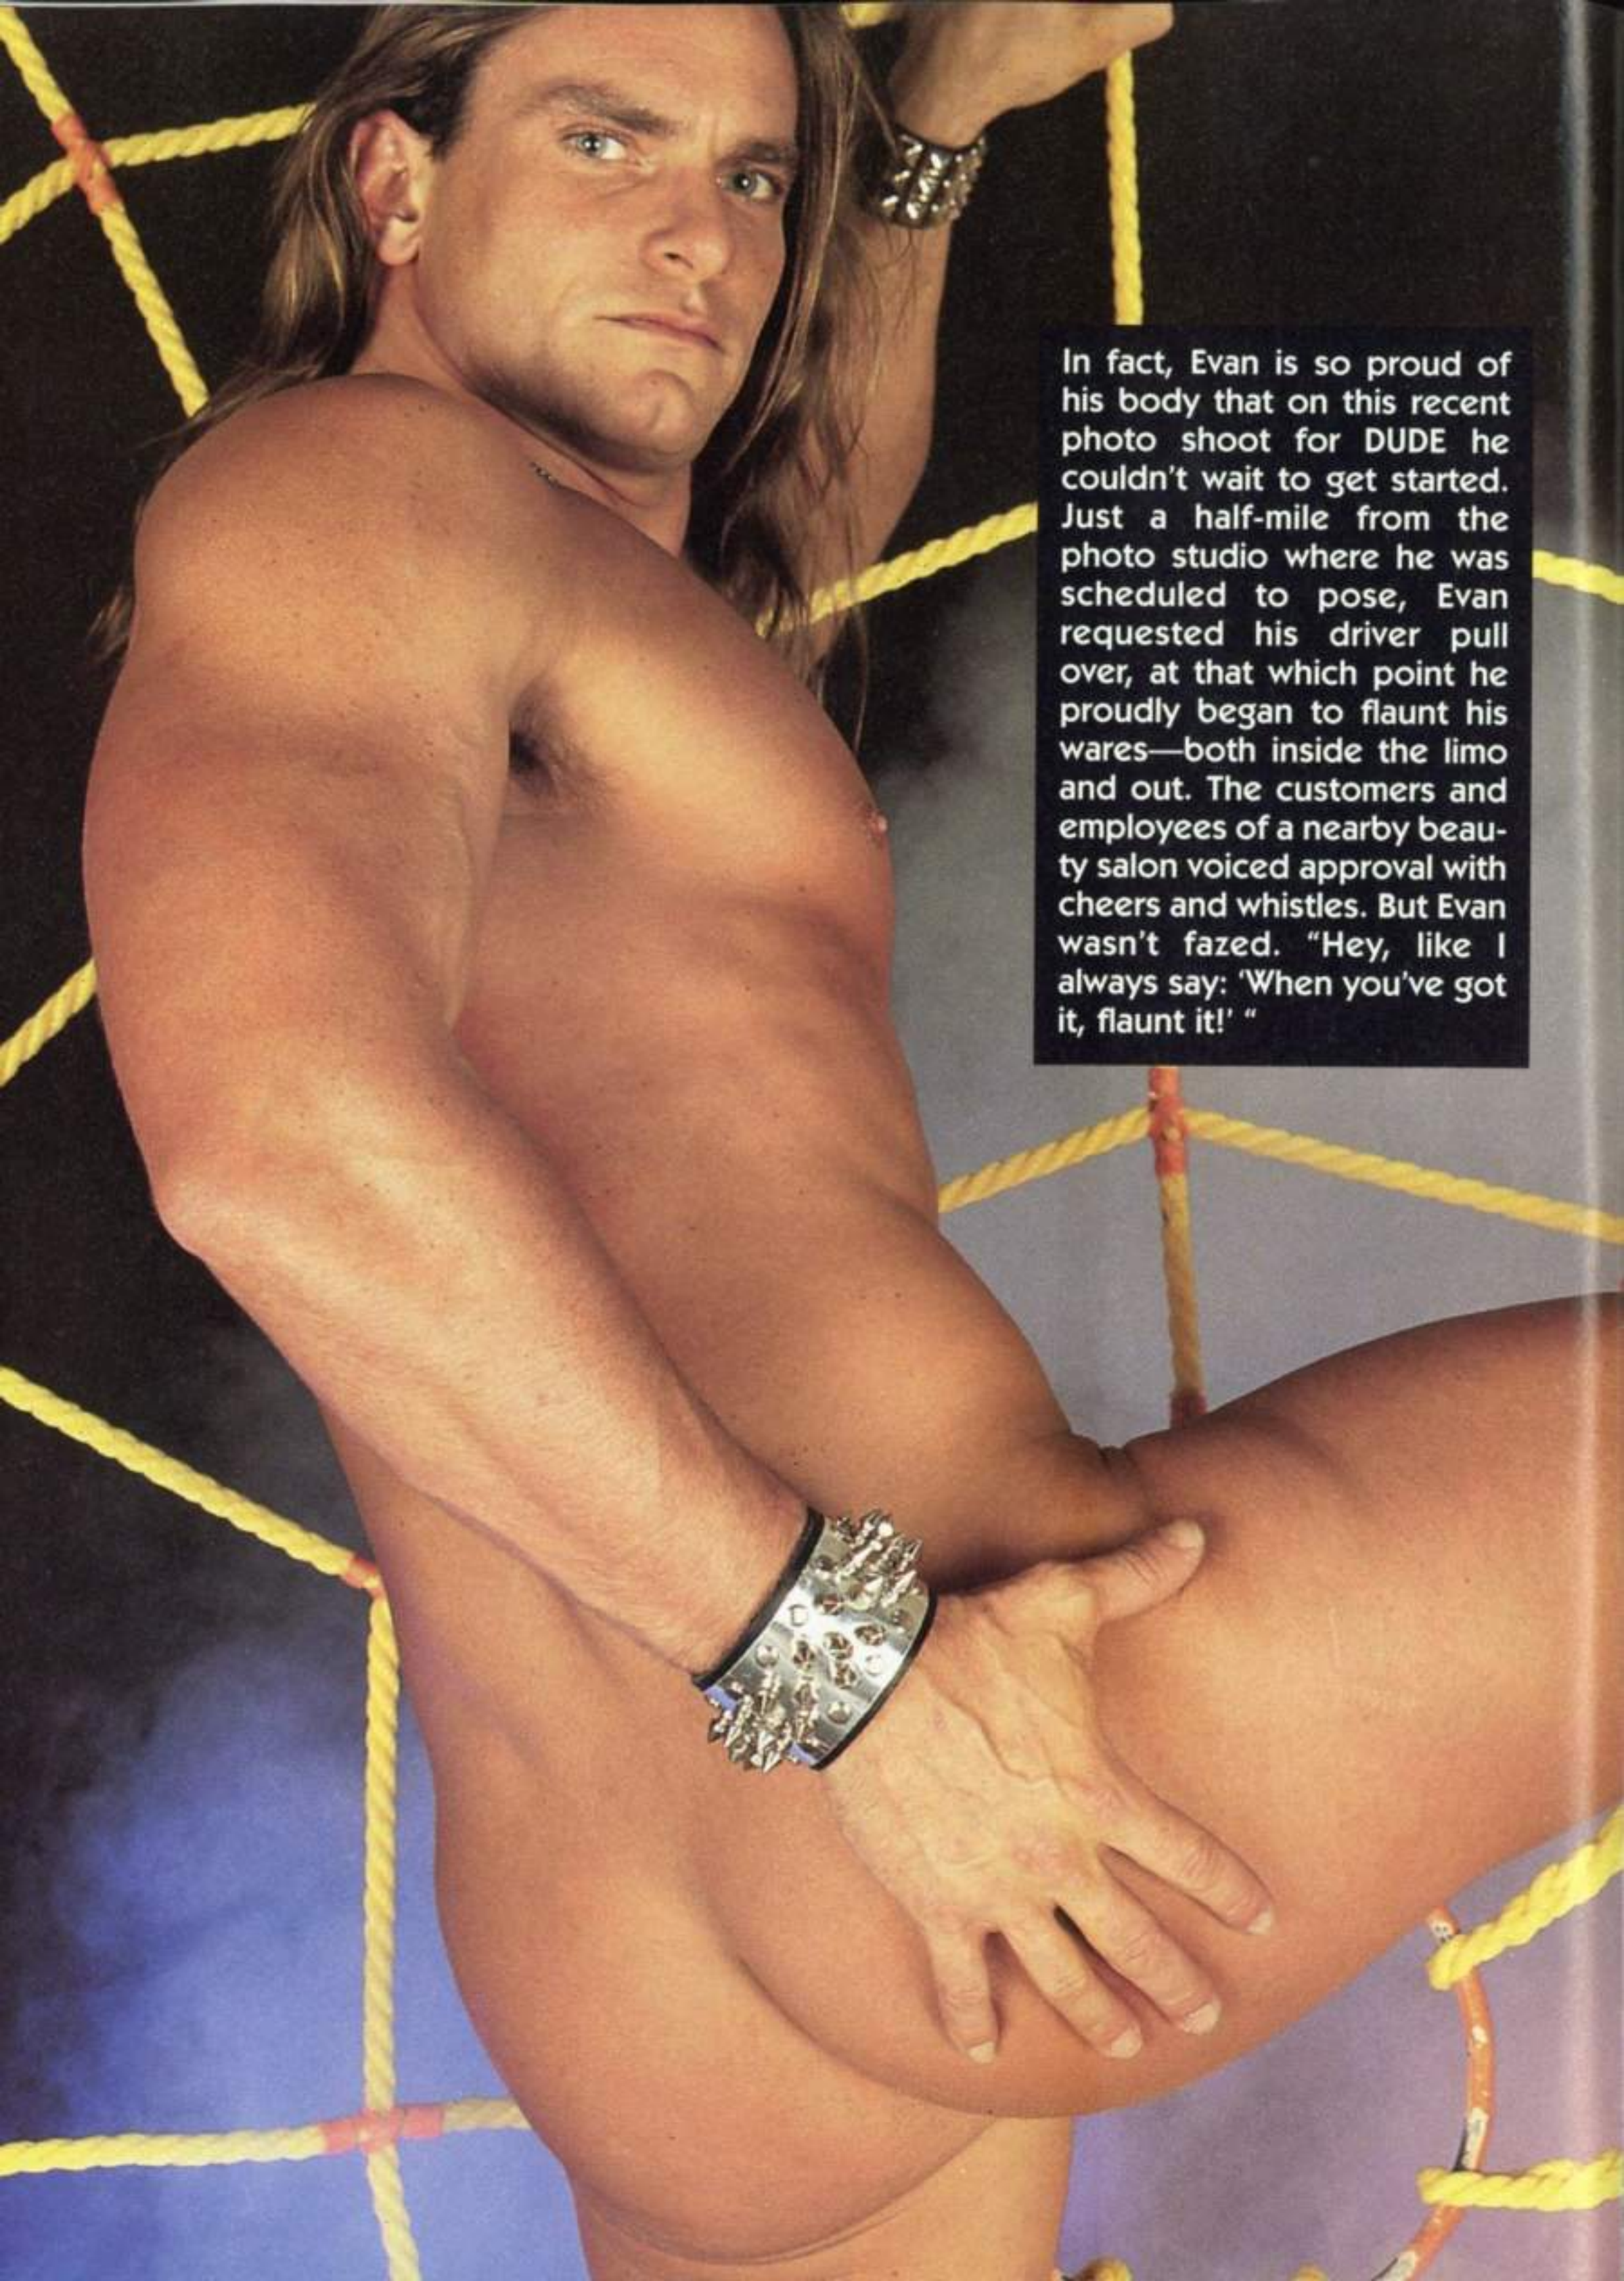


"People tell me that I look like a brown-haired Fabio," Evan admits. "But that's where it ends," he's quick to point out. "I've got my own personal style. I'm extremely aggressive and uninhibited. And as for taking off my clothes, well, nudity isn't so much the big sin people make it out to be. After all, we were all born this way. For me, it's actually a form of artistic expression. Everyone has two arms, two legs and so on...but everyone's different, whether it be in symmetry or size."



"But all the good looks in the world won't do you any good if you don't take care of yourself," Evan warns. So this aspiring fitness model follows a daily regimen of weightlifting, proper diet, jogging, sparring and "plenty of rest," he says. "I'll never abuse this body, inside or out. That's why you'll never see a tattoo anywhere on my body. To me, tattoos are more of a permanent scar than a way to express yourself."





In fact, Evan is so proud of his body that on this recent photo shoot for DUDE he couldn't wait to get started. Just a half-mile from the photo studio where he was scheduled to pose, Evan requested his driver pull over, at that which point he proudly began to flaunt his wares—both inside the limo and out. The customers and employees of a nearby beauty salon voiced approval with cheers and whistles. But Evan wasn't fazed. "Hey, like I always say: 'When you've got it, flaunt it!' "

PETER

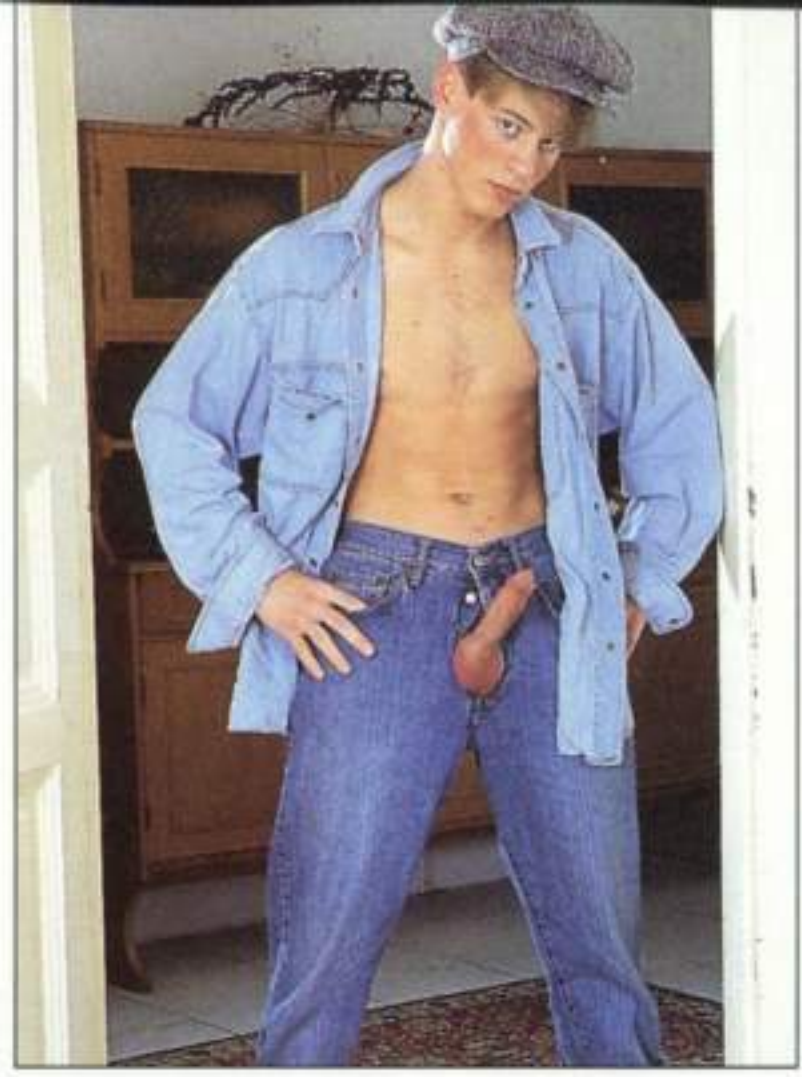
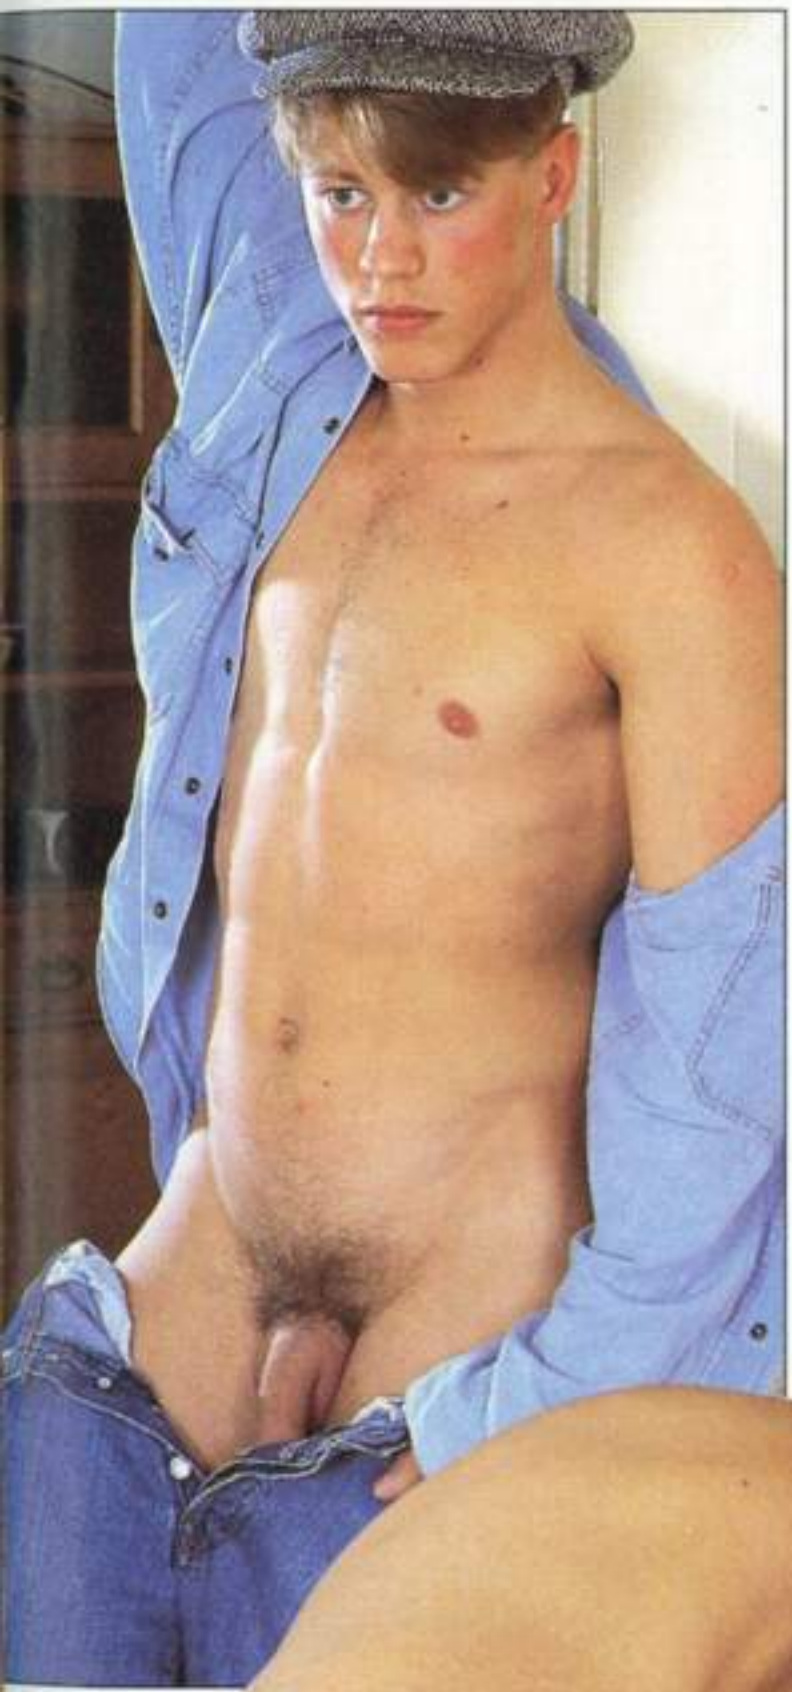
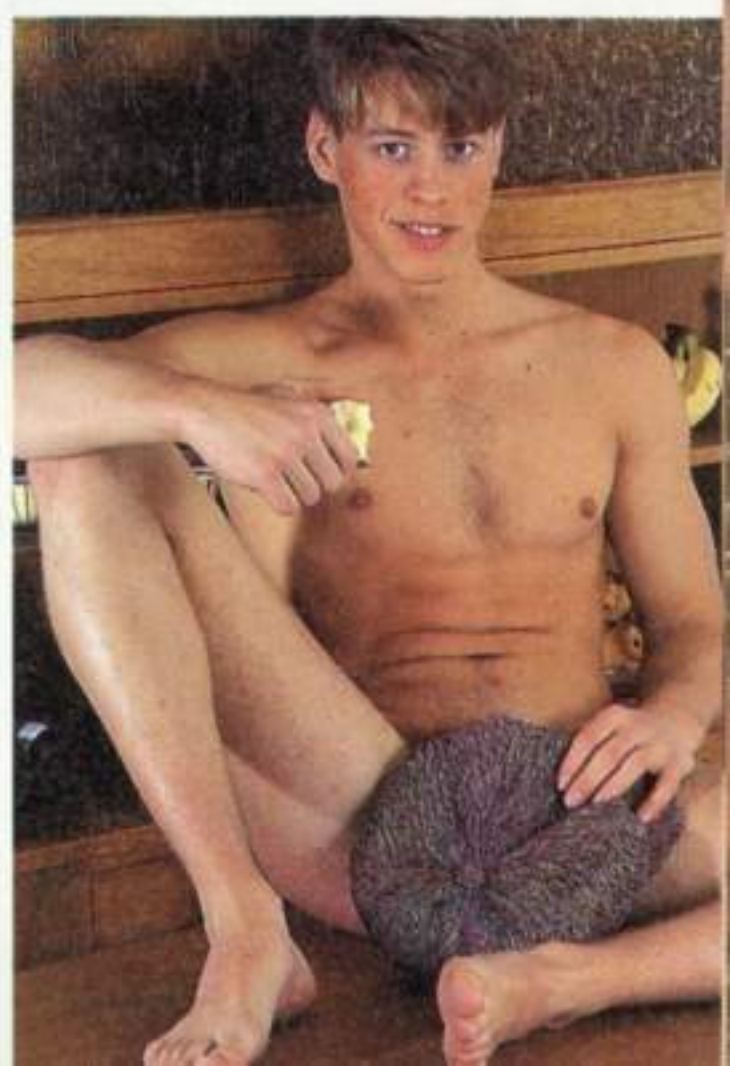
At just 18 years young, Amish farm boy Peter looks more like his biggest worry should be impressing a date with a nice set of wheels rather than something as serious as venturing out into the world on his own. But that's exactly what this rosy-cheeked Pennsylvania boy-toy has been contemplating. "I just didn't see myself staying here on the farm with a bunch of cows and a chicken coop full of hens," says Peter, explaining why he's giving up the Amish way of life. "I've led a very sheltered lifestyle, but now I want to explore all realms of my sexuality—something my heritage just wouldn't allow."





As DUDE's very first coverguy and centerfold, Peter is well on his journey into eroticism and carnality. "Posing for DUDE is like my coming out party," Peter says. "My family would shit if they found out that I did these photos. But I really don't care. I'm hoping to use this photo shoot as a catapult for more opportunities—movies, more modeling or whatever. I'm extremely open-minded and willing to try anything once."



DUDE

"I'm not as innocent and naive as I appear to be," Peter maintains. "When I was younger, me and my friend and his older brother would hitch a ride to town and he would buy some nude magazines from the convenience store and we would look at them in the hayloft of my Dad's barn. We even experimented with masturbation and talked about everything from doin' it with girls to doin' it with other guys." And what do you consider to be your greatest asset as you enter the world of adult modeling, Peter? "Personally, I think it's my young guy looks and my long tool. I just hope I'm able to make a name for myself." Peter, you're already well on your way!

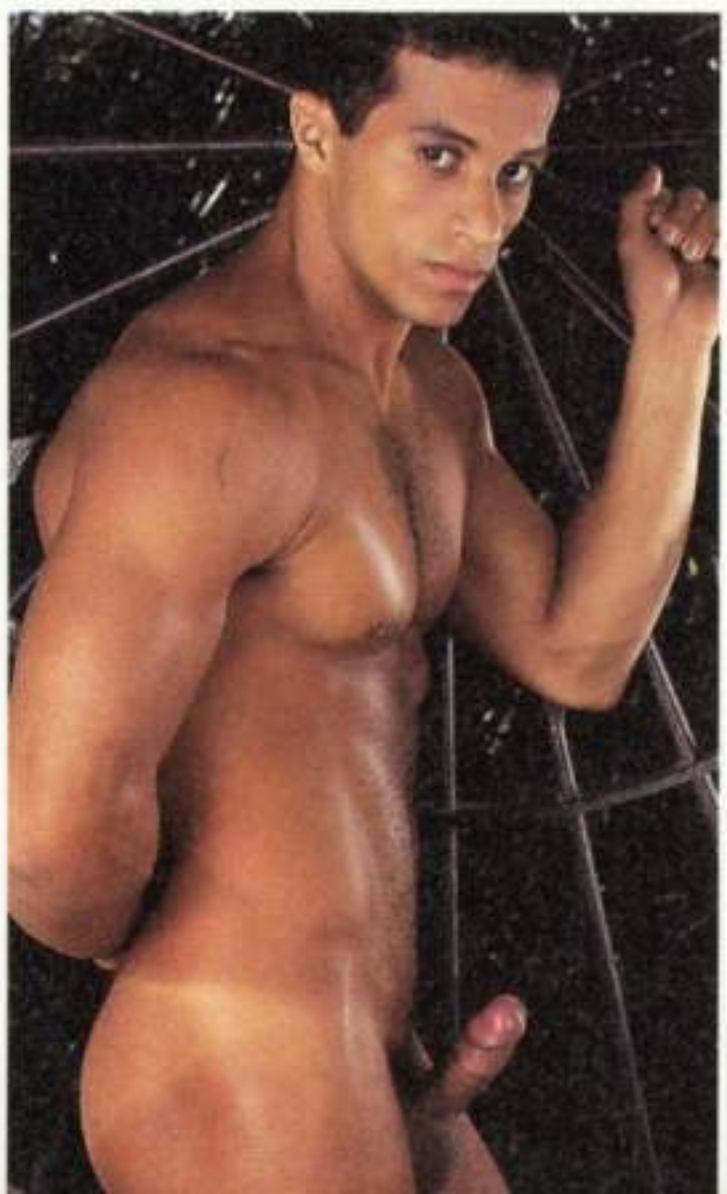
ARMANDO

He's a bad boy from Brazil—hunky, dark and intense. And whenever he walks the beaches of Rio, "heads definitely turn," brags Armando, a 26-year-old lifeguard with a lust for life...and hot, hot lovemaking. "All of my former lovers have described me as arrogant and brash," admits Armando in near-perfect English. "Well, that may be true, but I make no excuses. Call it Latin machismo if you want, but it's what helps me be successful. But I can also be warm, loving and caring, although this is a side of me that I show only to those who I'm most intimate with."



When he's not patrolling the beach, Armando enjoys weightlifting, playing soccer and dancing at Rio's fantastic discos. But it's his work—both manning the lifeguard station or strolling the beaches of Brazil's beautiful coastline—that turns him on most. "I get to show off my body, and I do mean all of it," Armando reveals. Sometimes when I'm off duty, I kick off my Speedo and walk along the shoreline in the nude. That's no big thing in Brazil where I come from. I consider my body a gift from God, so why not share it with others?" Why not, indeed!

HUNKS AT WORK

PHOTOGRAPHY BY MICHAEL FULLANA/CREATIVE EDGE

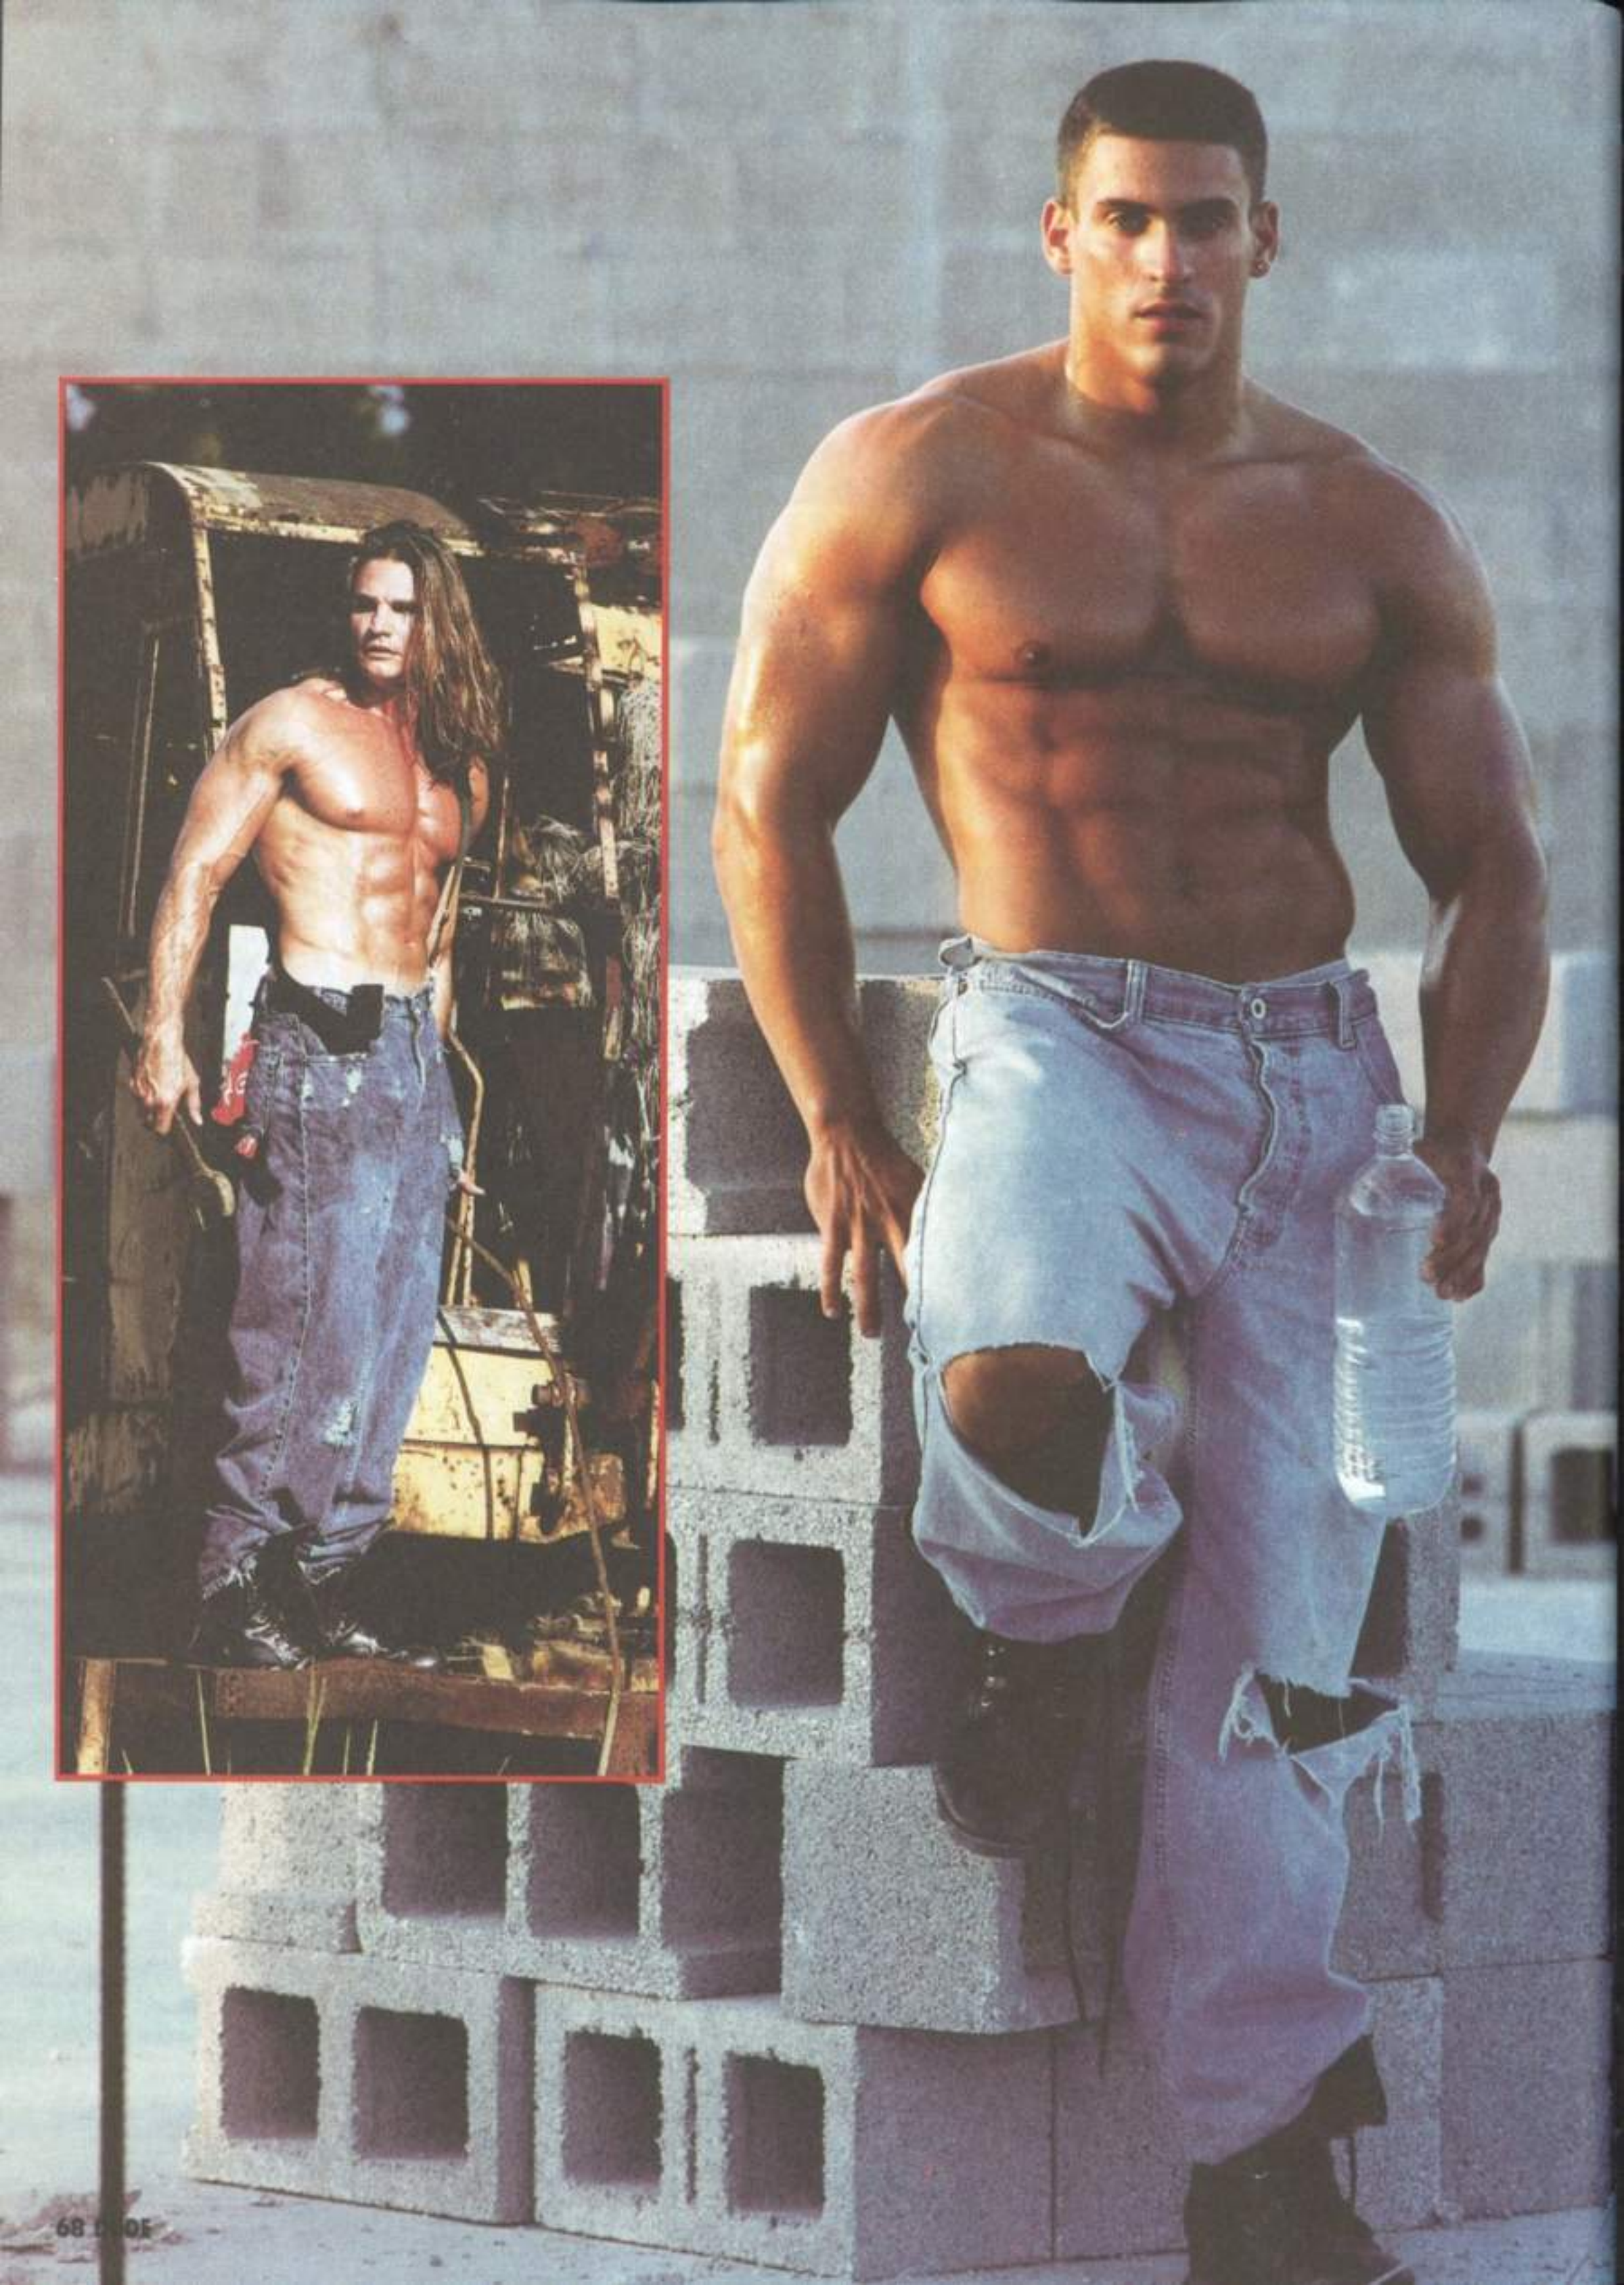
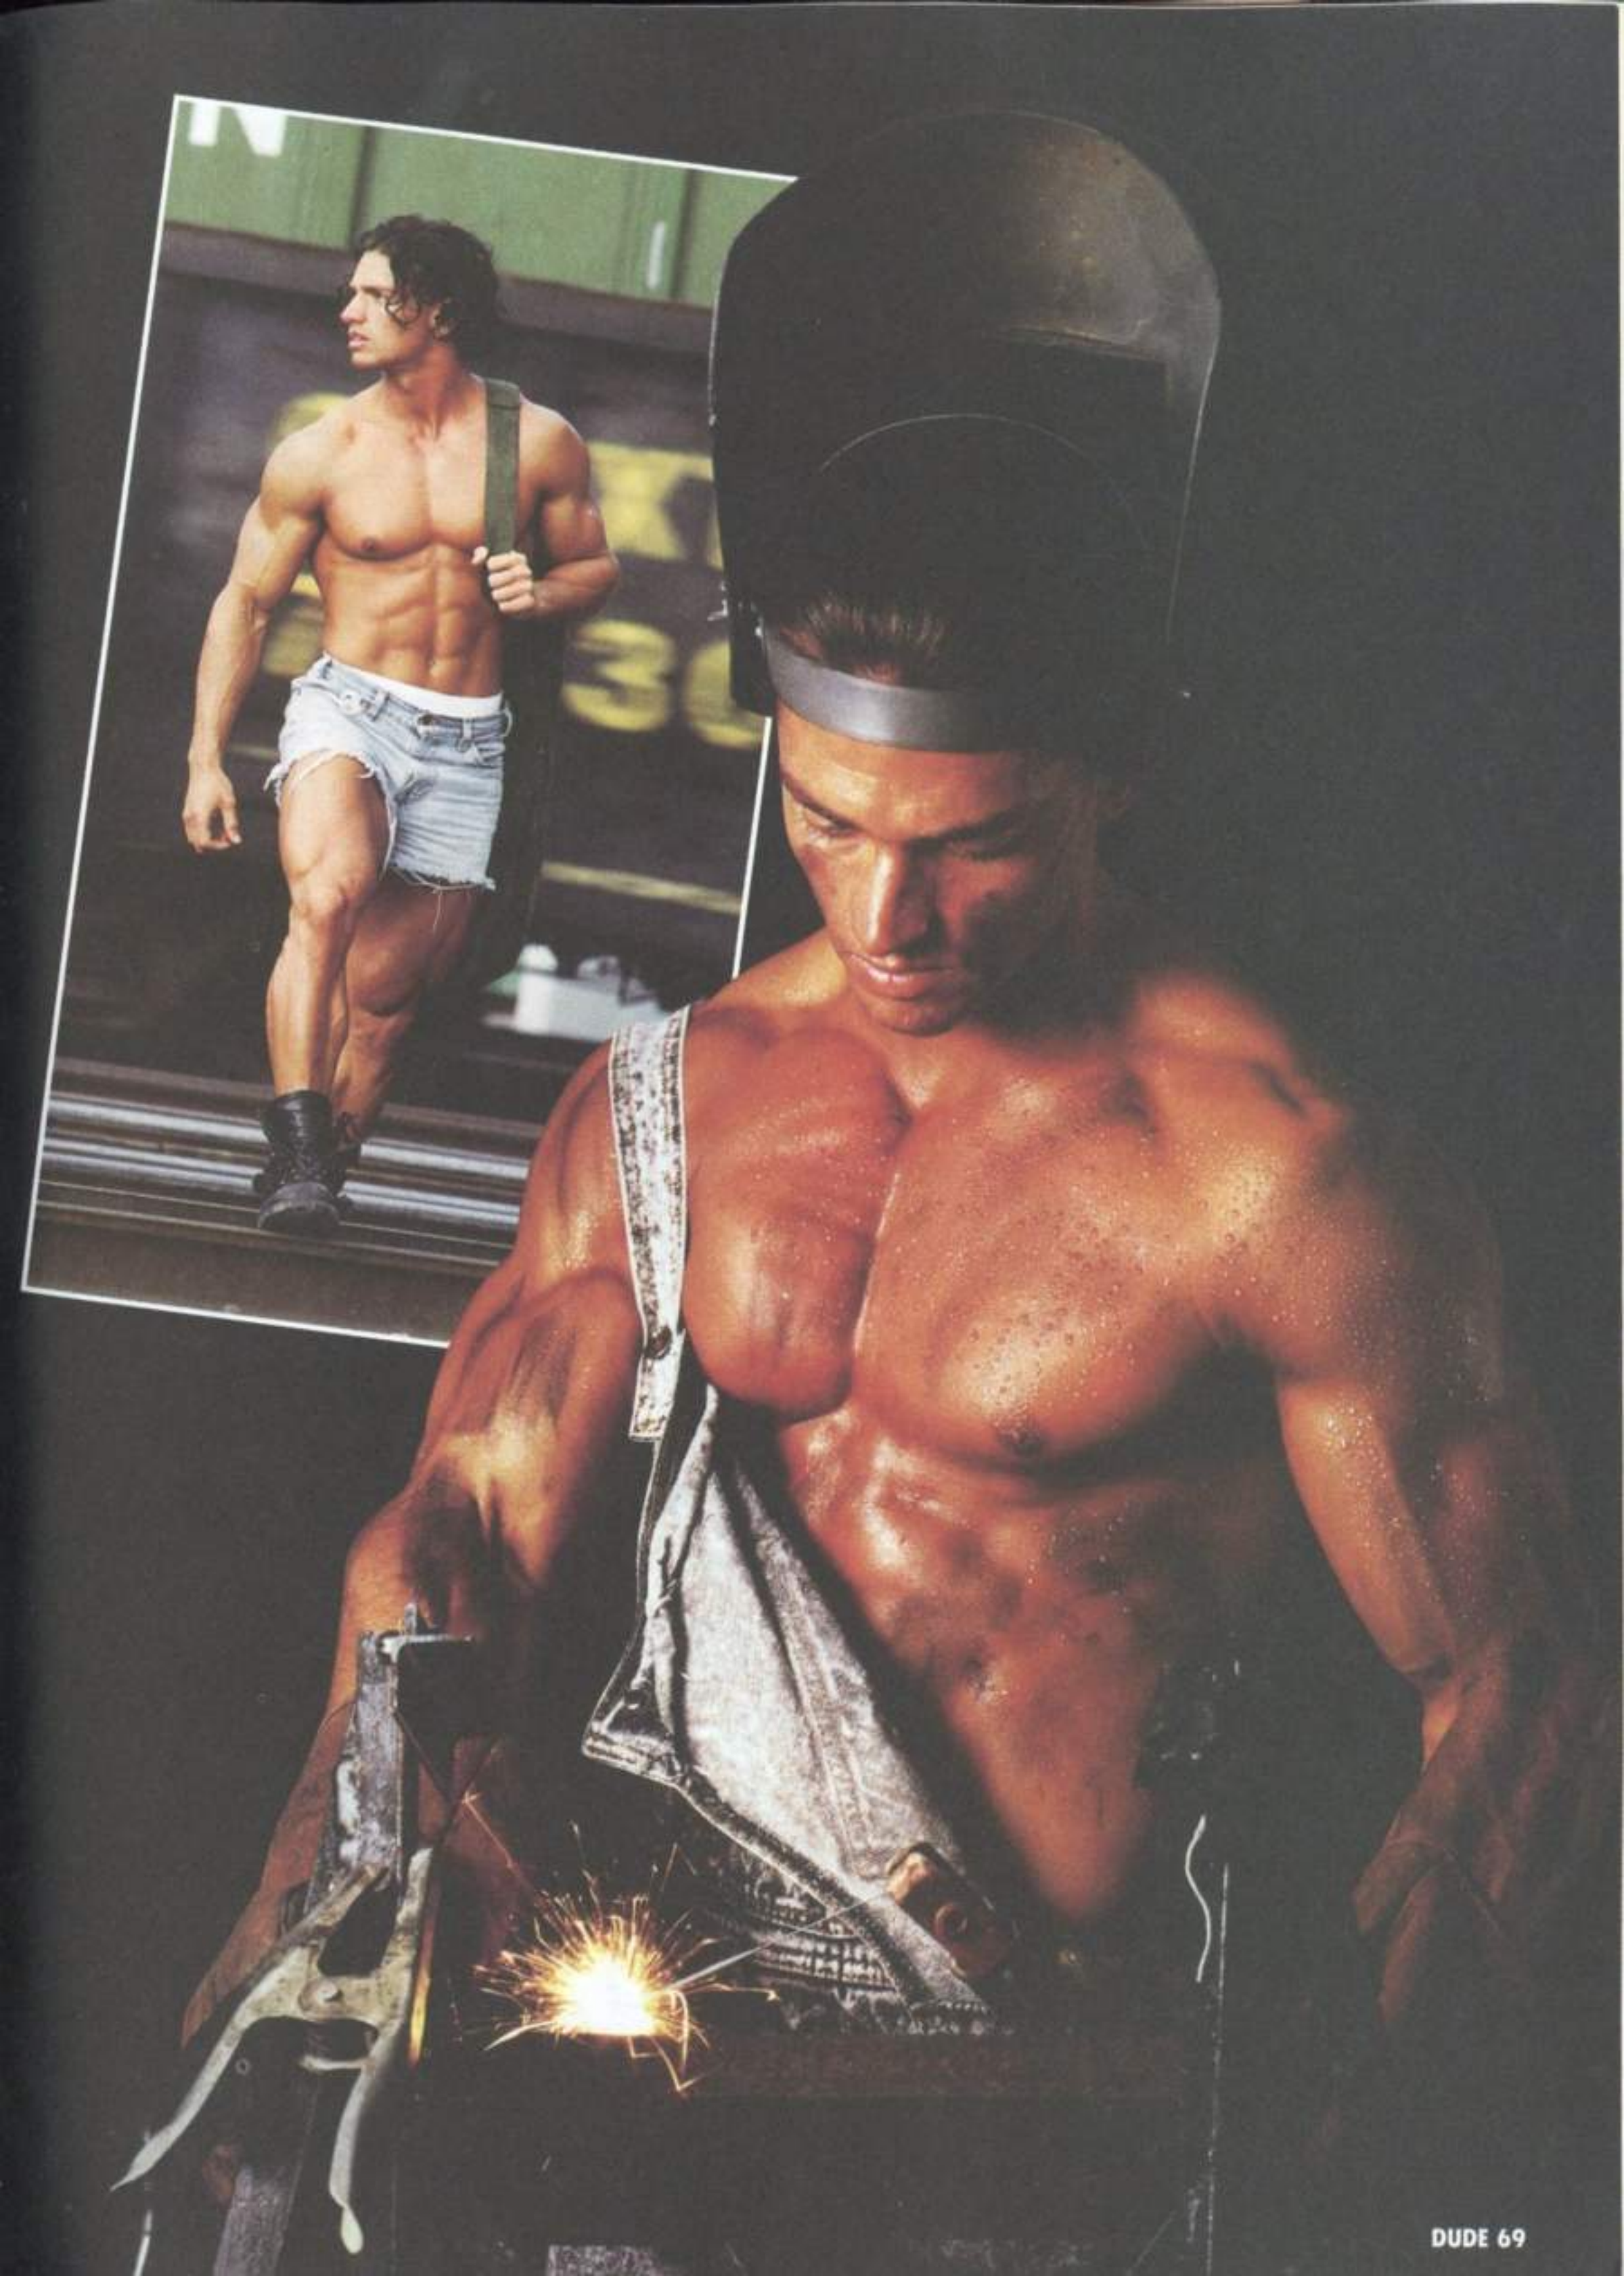
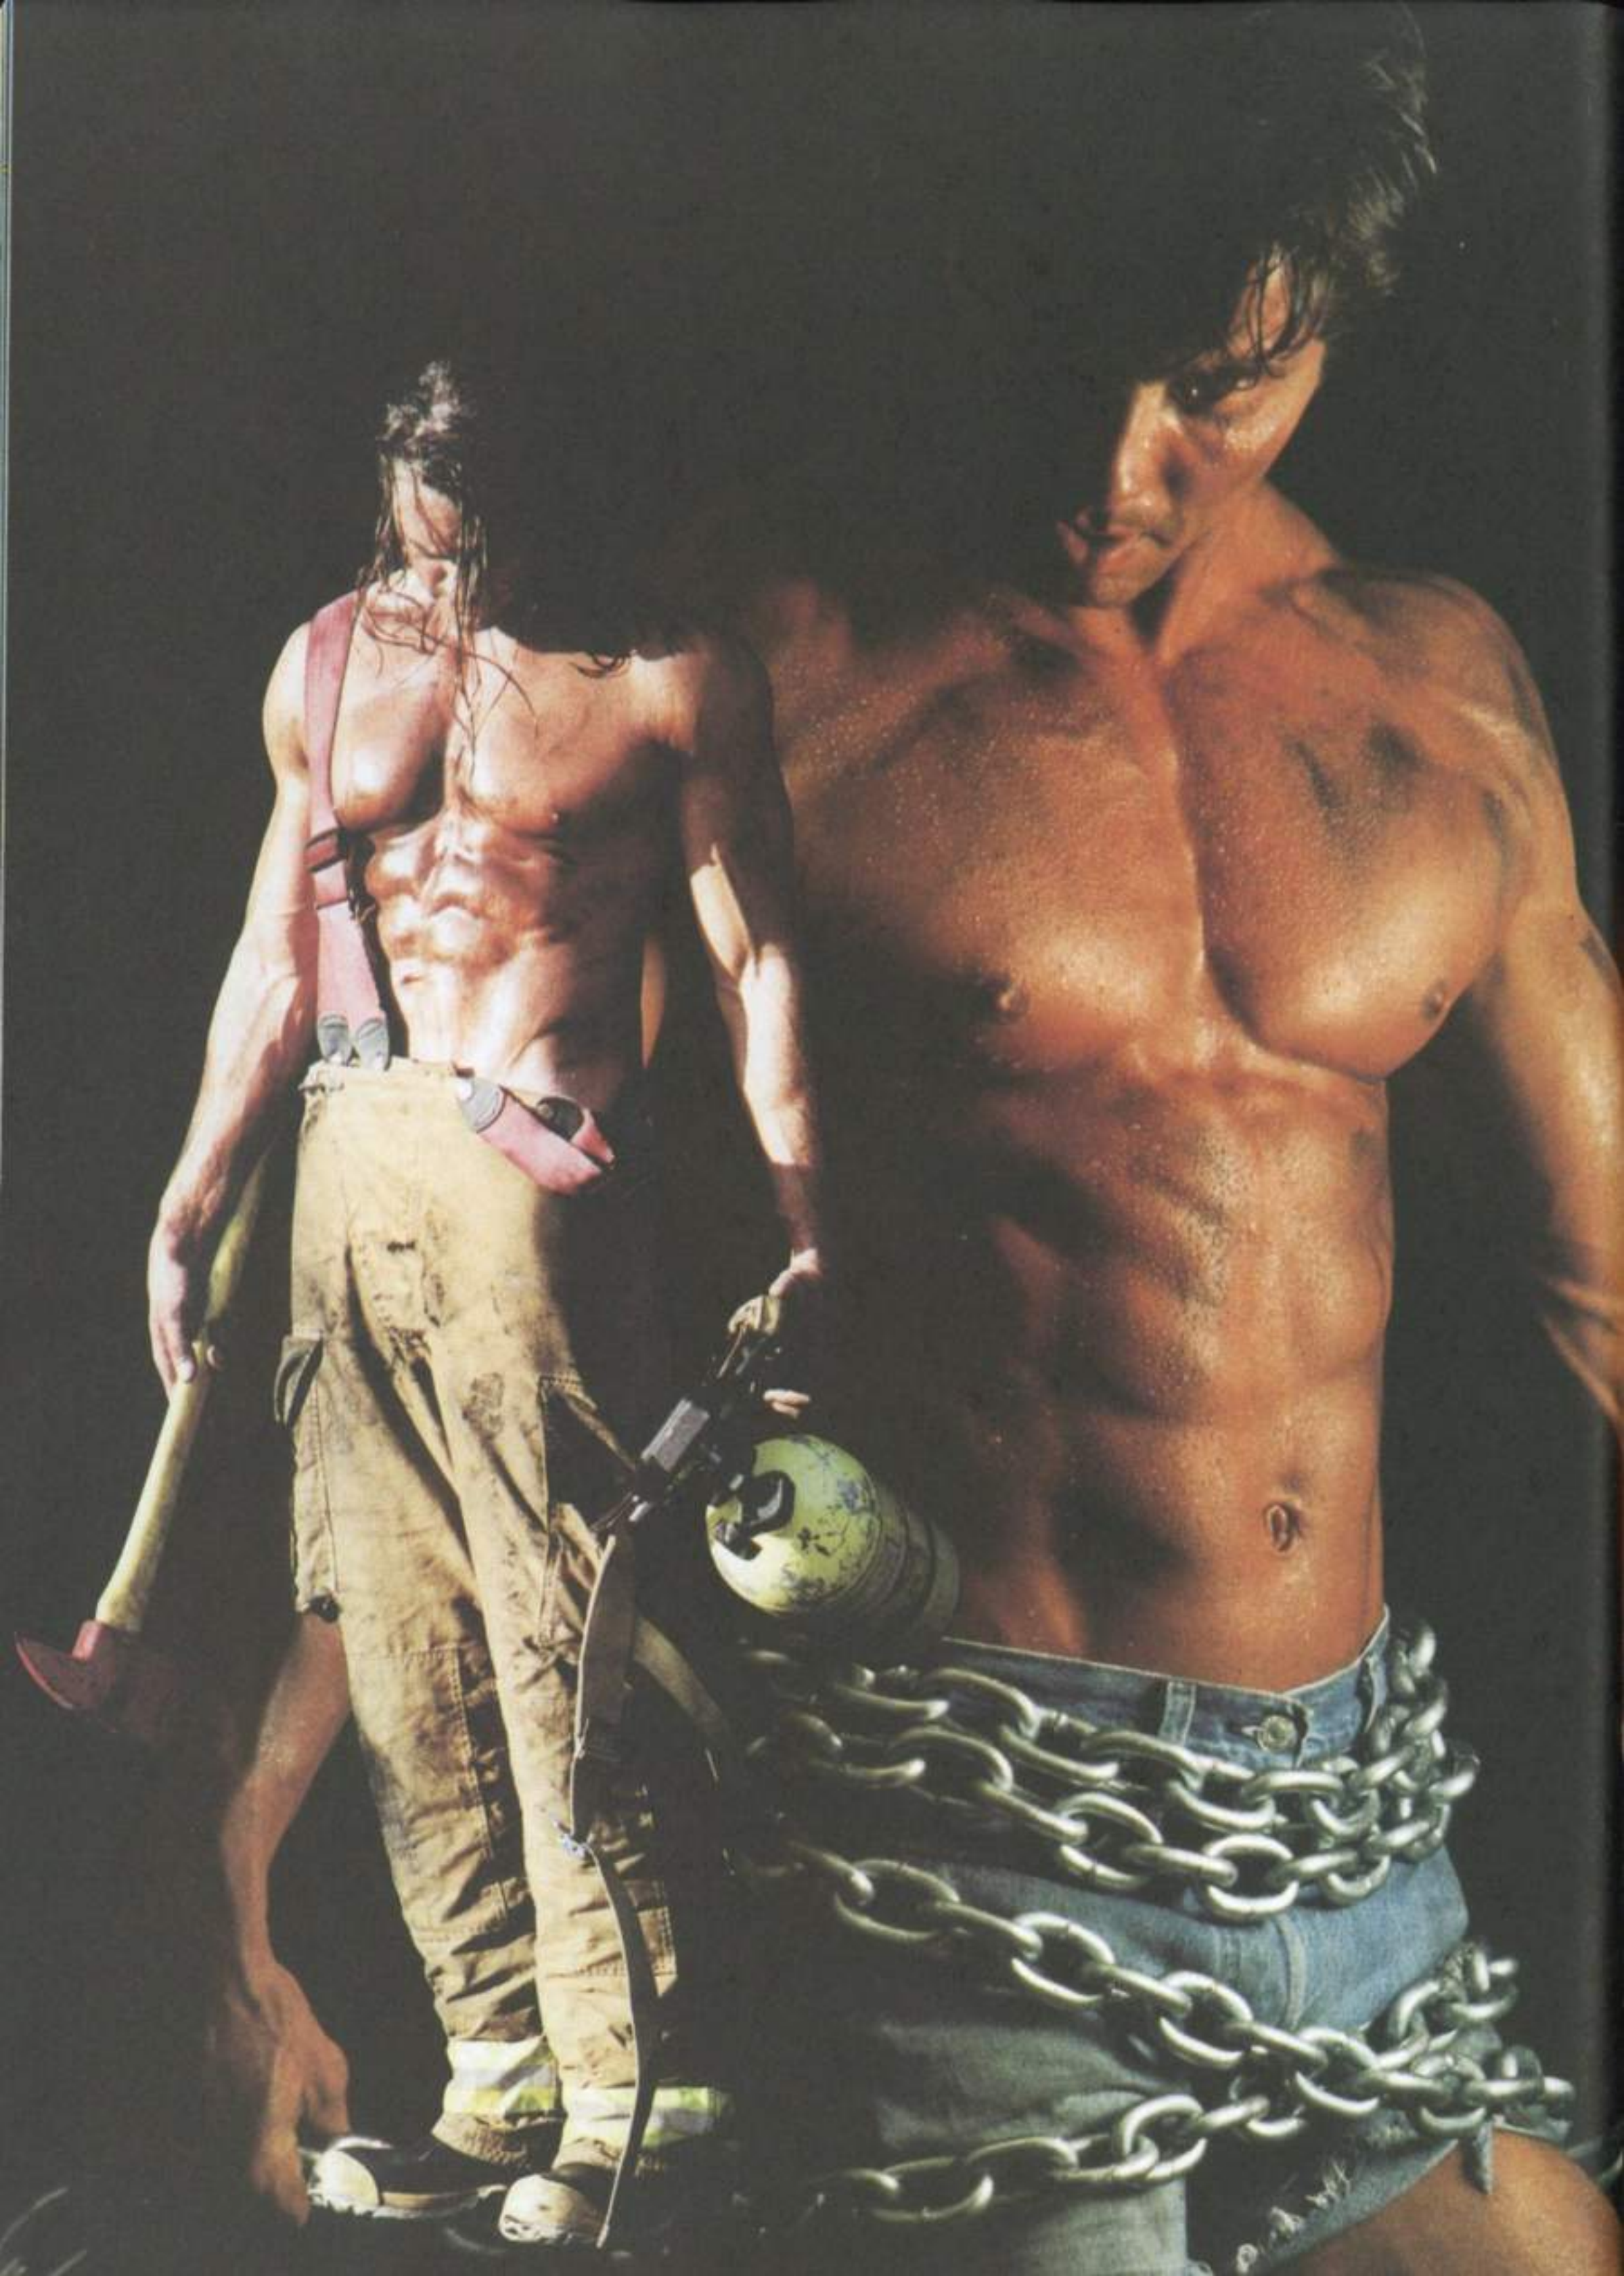
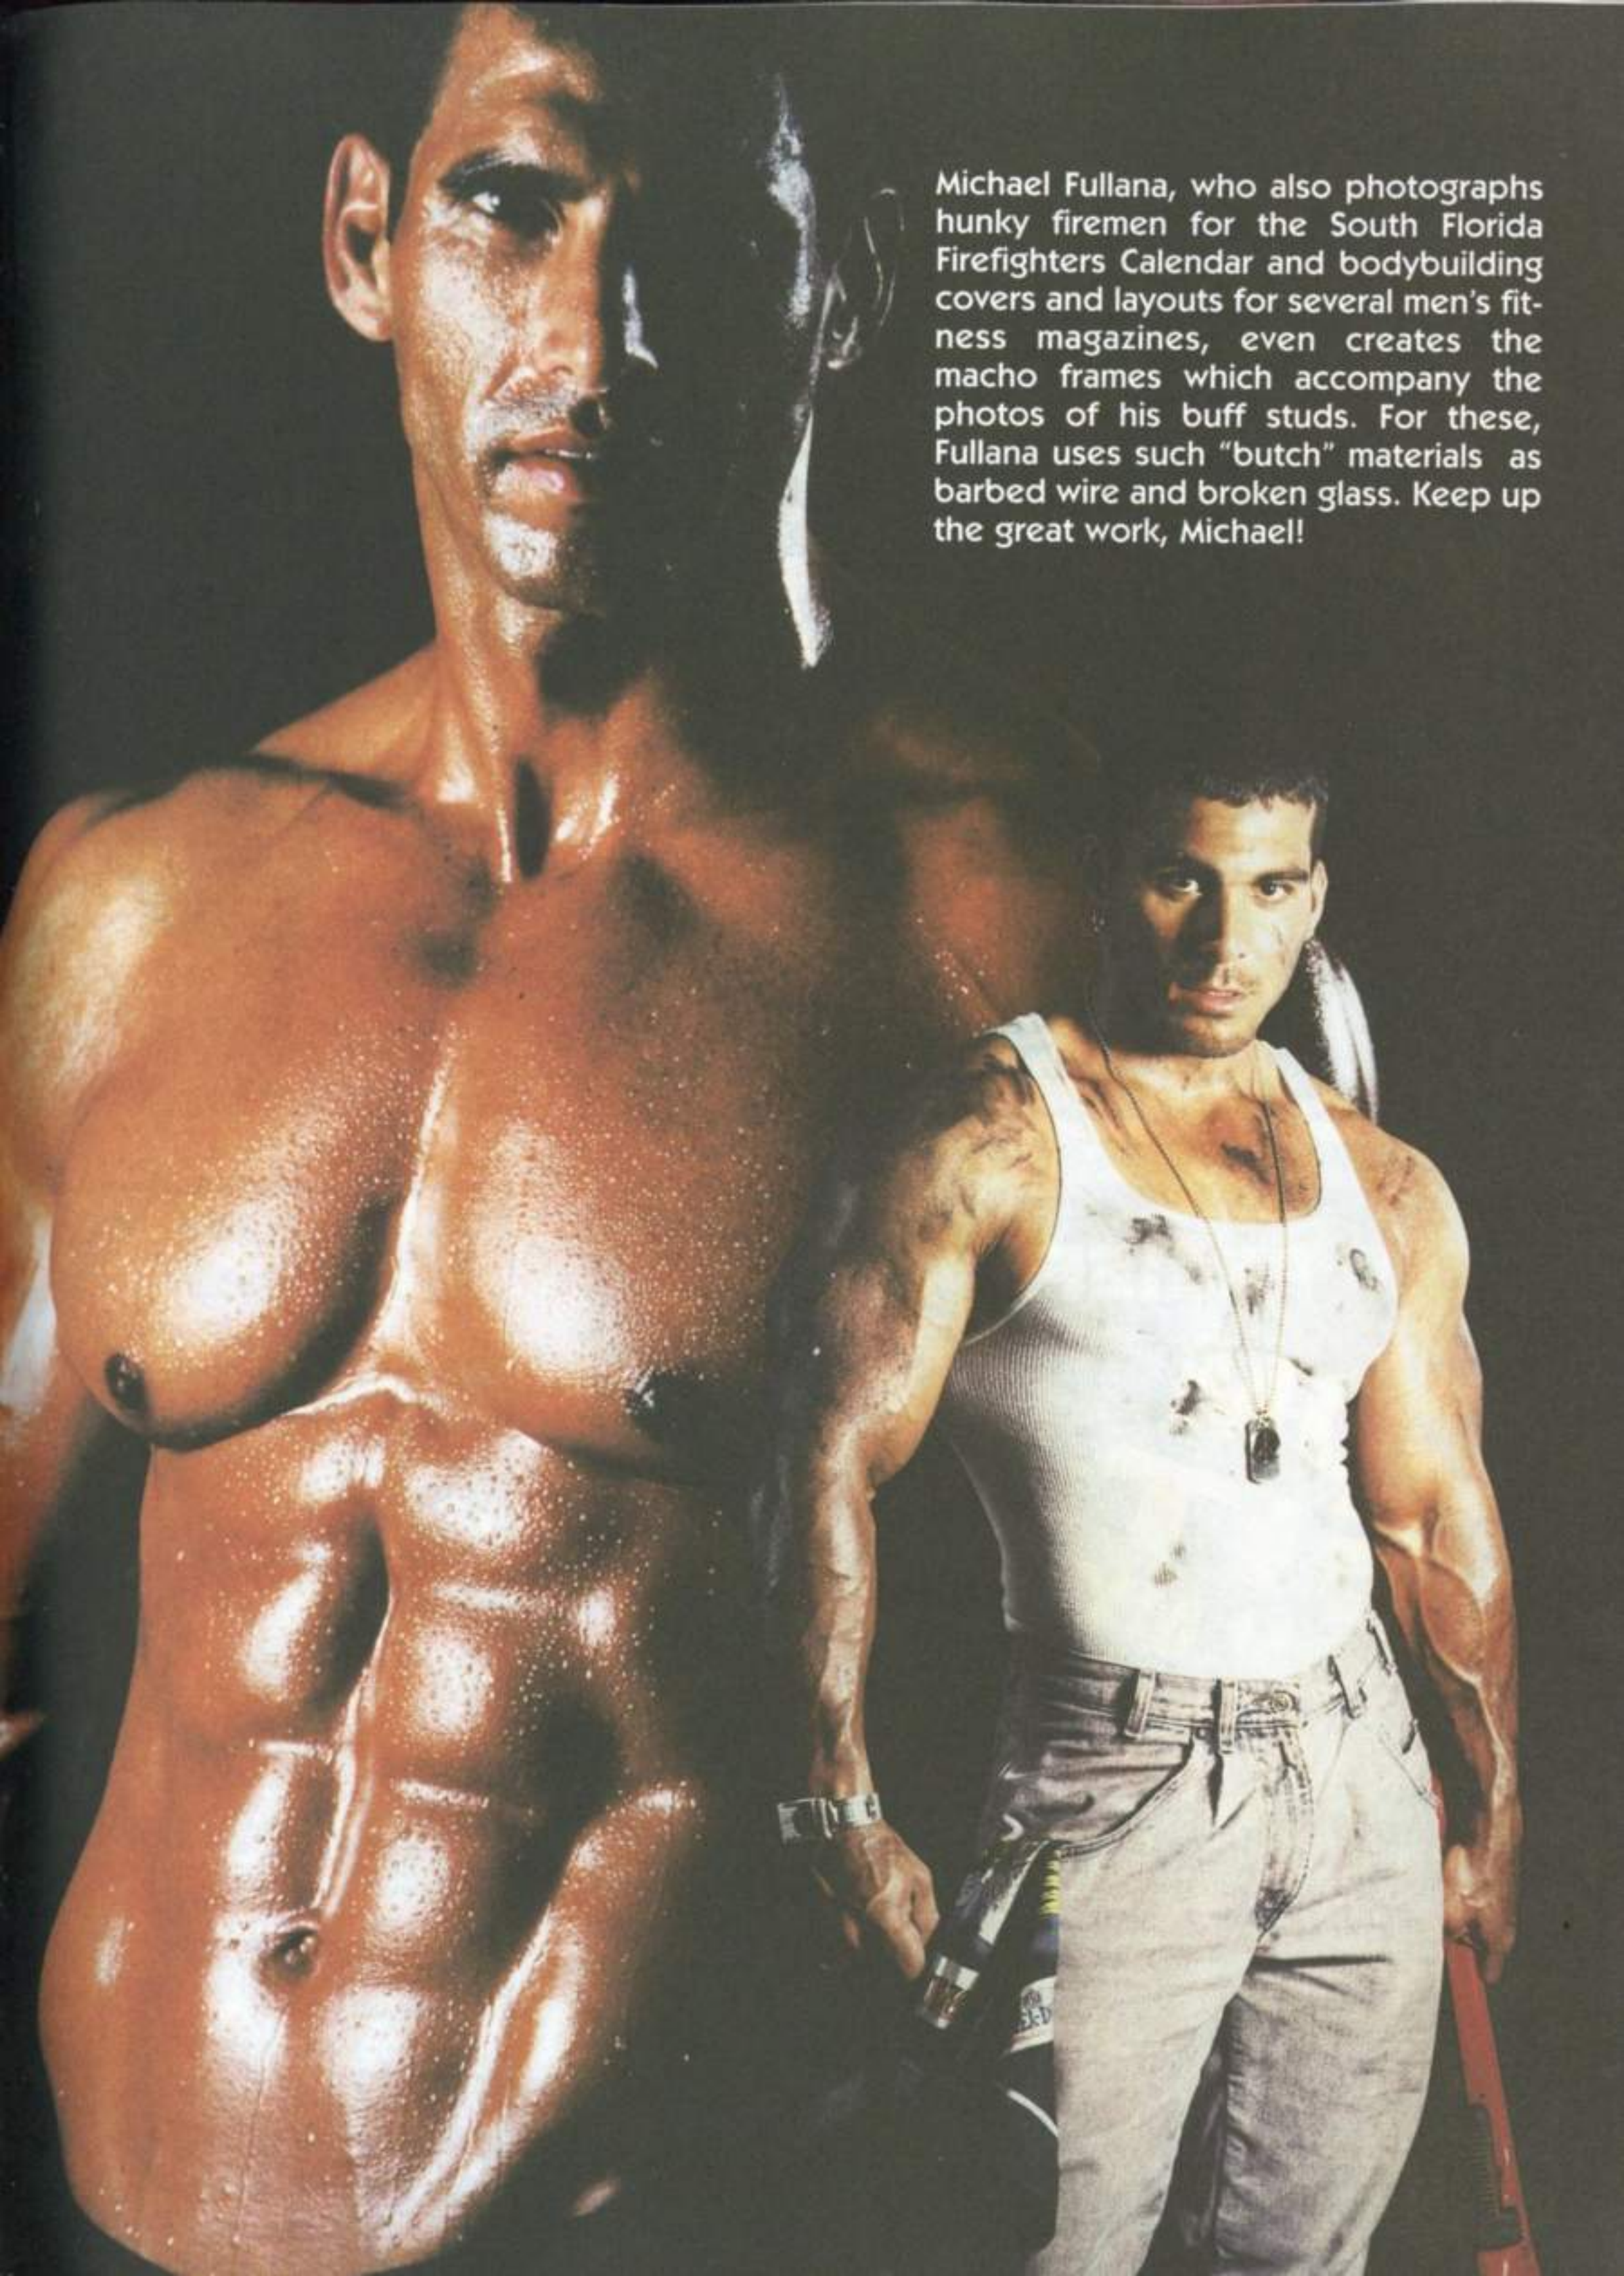
"Most of the guys that I photograph work out at my gym. I just show them my book and they can't wait to model for me," admits Miami-based photographer Michael Fullana. "As a bodybuilder myself, I can appreciate a great physique, and these guys know that I'll shoot them in a manner which shows off their fantastic bodies to their best advantage."









Michael Fullana, who also photographs hunky firemen for the South Florida Firefighters Calendar and bodybuilding covers and layouts for several men's fitness magazines, even creates the macho frames which accompany the photos of his buff studs. For these, Fullana uses such "butch" materials as barbed wire and broken glass. Keep up the great work, Michael!

VACUUM PUMPS CAN INCREASE PENIS SIZE SIGNIFICANTLY

COLUMN BY ANTON FURY

I'm sure most of you dudes reading this have, at one time or another, wished you had a bigger cock. I know I have. Even if you have eight inches hanging there, haven't you ever wished for just another inch or two? That's a given for most human beings: we always want more.

Well, there is a way to add an inch or two to your dick. It's not new, it's not magic and it's not dangerous. It's actually fun.

It's called vacuum pumping. It's been around since 1913 in one form or another. The high-tech pumping system that is in use today is extremely effective on many men and is the most effective non-surgical method there is for penis enlargement.

We've all seen the ads printed in adult magazines that claim you will achieve a 12-inch dick by using their $39.95 vacuum pump system. Bullshit! If you have the average six-inch cock, there is no way you will ever have a 12 incher by using a vacuum pump. It's just not possible. However, a seven-and-a-half or eight-inch dick is well within reach.

Some ads also claim their vacuum pumps can be used for masturbation. Vacuum pumps are not made for that purpose. I have seen guys blow their loads when their dicks are slid into a tube and the vacuum is applied. These are the guys who have hair triggers. They aren't going to do anybody any good no matter how big their cocks are. I don't have to address that here because I'm sure none of you guys falls into that category.

Before getting started, it will help to have a little understanding of the physiology of the male penis. I don't want to bore you with the science of penis enlargement, but a little understanding of what's actually happening can't hurt.

Inside the shaft of the penis are two inflatable cylinders that fill with blood when you get an erection. These cylinders are called the corpora cavernosa. By continually over-inflating these cylinders through vacuum pumping, they expand over a period of months and years, allowing more blood to fill them. This leads to a thicker penis.

Adding length is an altogether different story. There is a ligament that acts as a bridge to hold up the penis during erection. It is called the suspensory ligament. Over time, this ligament can be stretched to allow more of the penis to protrude from the body, adding more length.

There are two factors for positive results with vacuum enlargement. One is that some men just respond better than others. The other is how much time you devote to your workouts. Through a dedicated regimen of pumping, you can turn your daily gains into permanent ones.

Years ago, I came across a book on the subject of vacuum cock pumping. After reading it, I decided that I wanted to try it out. Like you guys, I was a little skeptical about investing as much as $100, yet I really wanted to try it out. So I went to my local adult bookstore and perused the shelves to find what I thought to be just the right one. In hindsight, there wasn't a good one in the place; they were all junk.

I plucked my $40 down and immediately went home to slip that baby on. I followed the instructions in the book to the letter. I quickly discovered that the vacuum pump system had potential. While there were defects with the cylinder, my dick was ballooning up to unbelievable proportions. I was hooked.

When I removed the tube, I thought I was holding someone else's cock. In my hand was the biggest piece of meat I had ever held before.

I thought, "Where have they been hiding this? Why doesn't everybody know about vacuum pumping?"

My partner was hooked, too. Never before had they been stretched so completely, which led to some pretty intense sex. Now, besides myself wanting the increase, I had the added incentive of my partner pushing me as well.

I immediately ordered a real system. The two-week waiting period for delivery was the longest two weeks of my life. I continued to use the cheaper device only because I couldn't stop.

All this took place about four years ago. I have tried many different regimens to find what was just right for me. As with everything in life, what works best for one person, doesn't necessarily work for another.

What seems to give me the best results is pumping intensely for one or two days and then laying off for five or six days. On the days when I use the pump, I spend up to five or six hours in the tube.

I shave my cock and balls. I have done this for years anyway, but with pumping, it helps to give a good seal if you are shaved at the base of your dick.

The first thing I do is lube myself up real good and juicy. Lubricant serves two purposes: it allows you to slide into the tube and it keeps the skin moist so it can stretch.

There are all different kinds of lubes. If you talk to 10 different pumpers, you'll get different recommendations. I've used them all, but I keep coming back to good old petroleum jelly. Water soluble is easier to clean up but it tends to dry quicker. Oil base lasts much longer on your dick.

While you are applying the lube, your dick will start to fill up a little bit. This helps when you first put the tube on. You don't want a full erection, but a little firmness will help.

I start with the tube that fits me just right. It takes about 45 minutes to fill up that one and then I move to the next larger size. It takes a bit longer to fill that tube and then I move to the next size. As long as I keep the vacuum up, my dick just keeps on swelling.

One of the key things here is to keep a moderate vacuum. With too much vacuum, you can develop tiny pinprick bloodspots call petechial hemorrhages. These aren't serious. They disappear if you take some time off from your routine. But if you can avoid them, do so. I've found that less vacuum gives you a more even pump. Remember, less pressure for a longer time gives the best results.

Every hour or so during these sessions, I will take the tube off and stroke my dick to allow the blood to start flowing. What a rush when I first hold my pumped cock in my hand! I will stroke it back and forth until I'm just about ready to blow and then stuff it back into the tube.

This goes on for hours at a time. I just want to keep getting bigger and bigger, to keep filling up the next-size tube.

Once I decide I've had enough for a session, I will remove the tube and get the blood flowing throughout my dick again. I grip my huge pulsating piece of meat around the base and start stroking up and down, back and forth. I can't even touch my fingertips together when I hold it in my fist. It's as hard as a rock and as big as a salami.

I take a six-foot leather strip and wrap it around the base of my cock and balls. I pull it nice and tight to keep the blood and fluids from escaping. The whole time, I'm stroking my dick and pulling and squeezing my balls. The feeling I get from holding this new piece of swollen meat is unbelievable!

After I'm through playing, I unwrap the leather strip and put on a cock-ring. The one I use most often is made of leather and has studs. But sometimes I use a pair of rubber rings. There are all different types on the market.

The cock-ring helps to keep things swollen. Without it, you will go back to your original size in about two days. With it, you can double your time. The longer you keep things pumped, the more accustomed your dick will get to its bigger size.

Pumping is a long-term commitment like bodybuilding. The more intense your workout, the better results you will get. Things don't happen overnight, but with diligence and effort, you can accomplish your goals.

I have had many wild experiences directly related to cock pumping, both at home and in public. You won't believe the looks you'll get when you put on a pair of tight pants and go out after you've pumped for four hours. People can't help but look when your cock is hanging halfway to your knees!

I make my own tubes now. This way, I get exactly what I feel is the best possible tube for my needs. I've experimented with different sizes and shapes and have been working on a masturbation machine using the tubes.

I've gone to pump parties at the Maze in New York City where there are 25 guys walking around with tubes on. I've had parties at my house in the dungeon, and I even use it with submissives during cock and ball play. These are all stories you'll be seeing in upcoming issues. D

FRATERNITY BROTHERS

How would an awesome-looking, straight, married dude react when he finds out that his former college buddy had—and still has—the hots for him? You'd be surprised...

FICTION BY MAURICE DEWALT

When Reed hung up the phone, he realized that he was sporting a roaring hard-on. That voice had done it—after eight years—Shay Walters' voice. That smoky growl deep in the throat could still do it for him.

Shay had transferred from California to Michigan State, Reed's alma mater, in his senior year, and immediately induced in Reed a state of high anxiety. Shay had everything—in spades: muscular perfection, yet not so highly buffed as to looked pumped up. With his blond buzz-cut, his finely shaped head, aqua marine eyes with shady, long lashes and a mouth to dream on (lips a little too thick—yeah!) he had everything.

There was plenty up-front too: an appendage that flopped and bulged in the loose trousers he wore which made it impossible to conceal.

But it was his ass that made him a star in Reed's eyes: not soft, yet big and round and fulsome with plenty of "fighting puppies" action when he walked. The back and forth motion in the seat of his pants hypnotized Reed like the systemic movement of a windshield wiper blade.

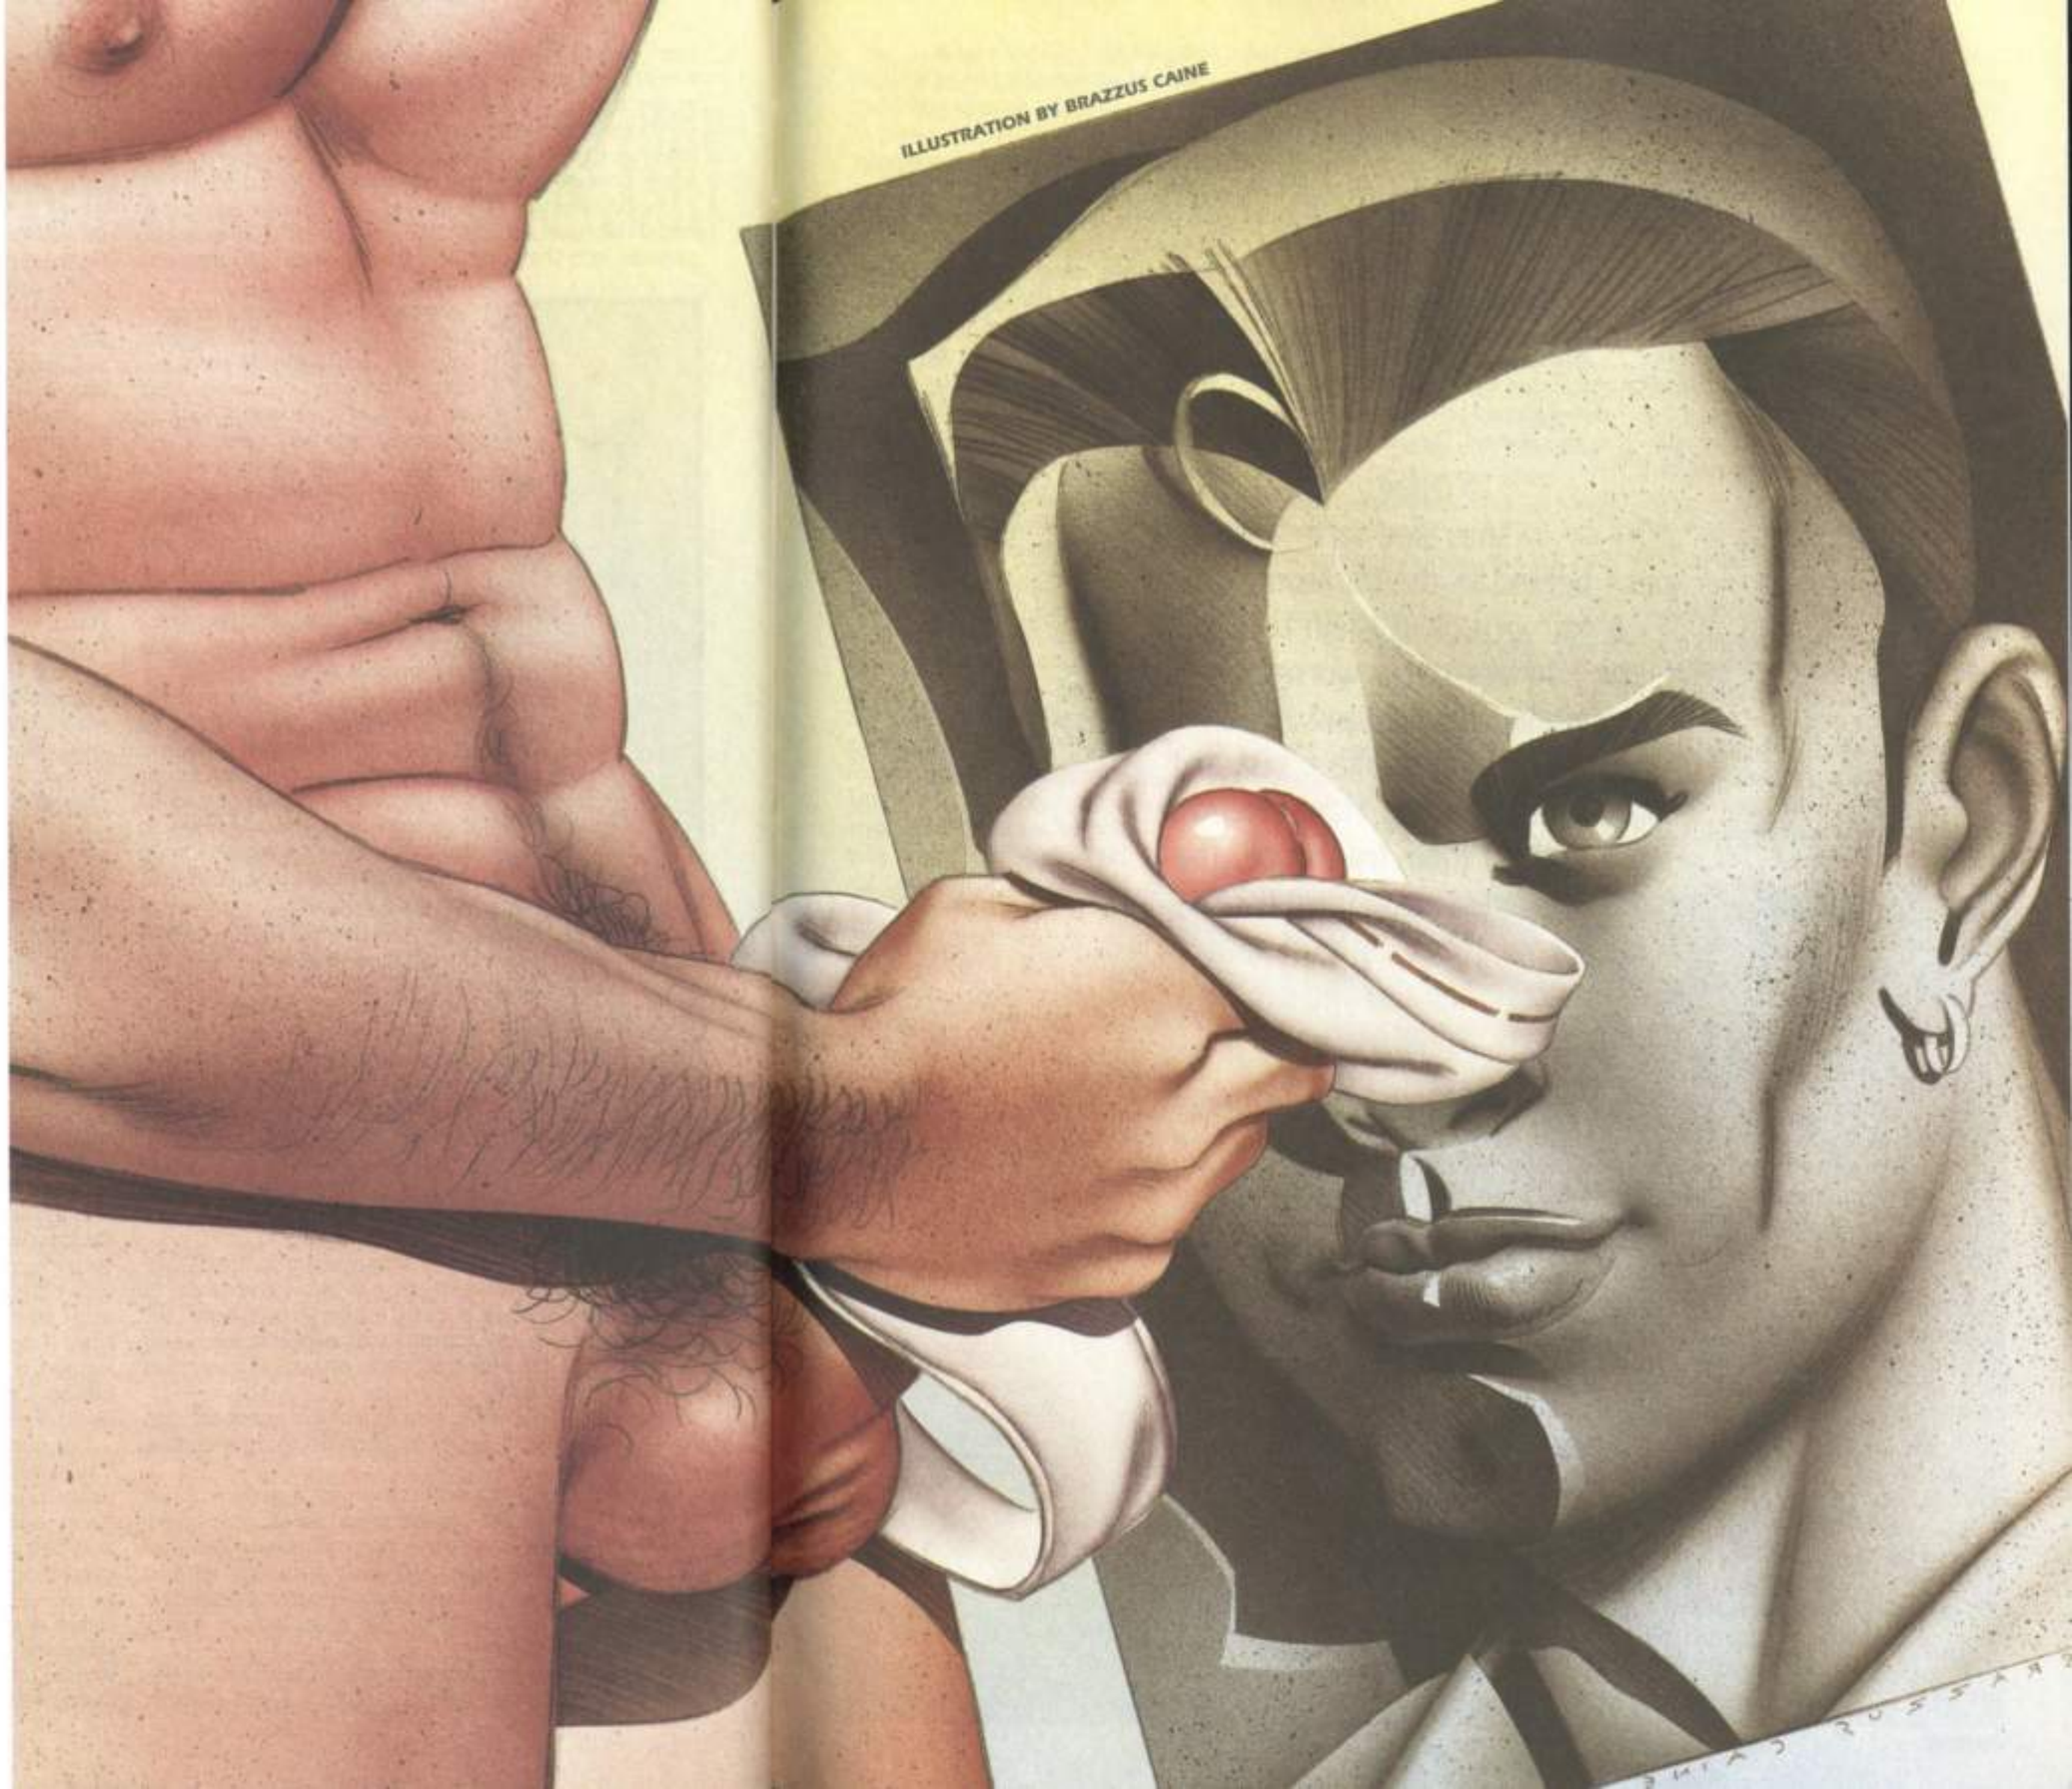

ILLUSTRATION BY BRAZZUS CAINE

Shay was also—as far as anyone could learn—straight. He had girlfriends but never seemed to screw around or take advantage of the fact that he could have had, as the saying goes, any cunt he wanted—though he was never heard to refer to women in those terms. He had a natural friendliness that often looked like flirting, whether he intended it to or not. It drove people crazy.

Reed and Shay had lived in the same fraternity house though they had not shared the same room; Shay knew that would have driven him up the wall—just hearing Shay breathe would have given him an erection.

But there was shower time which Reed shared as often as he could. That great, veined, uncut cock, the deep and mysterious cleavage of Shay's ass-crack and firm, shapely pecs with their twin pink acorns were more tempting than anything Reed had ever seen, and the effort at seeming cool when he was so hot took a superhuman effort. Actually, Shay never seemed to resent the stares—nor did he invite them.

Once Shay had left behind in the bathroom a pair of Calvin Klein briefs he had obviously worn for a couple of days, and Reed pounced on them like a buzzard on a tender rabbit. How often he had sniffed their fragrance—the most personal odor in the world—burying his face in the slightly pungent seat and the crotch with its light amber stains.

Reed did not know how many times he had masturbated over them. Once he had shot a load into the crotch and, after it had dried, he had licked it, pretending it was Shay's load.

Reed was no slouch himself with his dark, sensuous good looks, sullen mouth and black silky hair that often strayed over his deep, romantically dark eyes. With a good, if unathletic build and respectably-sized cut dick, he never lacked for lovers, but nearly always, when he was making love, he pretended each of them was Shay.

One time Reed had coached Shay for a very tough exam in advanced math, at which Reed excelled. Sitting next to him, sweating while trying to appear cool, had been an all-night ordeal but it had formed a casual bond between the two and, after graduation, they had remained in touch, though less and less as the years passed.

Now Shay was coming to Ann Arbor, Michigan, where Reed worked for Gross Computicorp. He was to attend a three-day seminar for the insurance company for which he worked. Shay called and thought perhaps they could have a drink together, if that was convenient.

With spinning head, Reed assured him that it certainly was convenient (as he shifted his hard-on—that deep voice was as sexy as ever). Then, thinking quickly, he asked Shay about his accommodations. Instead of another dreary, orange plaster Holiday Inn—why not stay with him? He had plenty of room in his condo.

Once Shay had left behind in the bathroom a pair of Calvin Klein briefs he had obviously worn for a couple of days, and Reed pounced on them like a buzzard on a tender rabbit. How often he had sniffed their fragrance, the most personal odor in the world, burying his face in the slightly pungent seat and the crotch with its light amber stains.

"If it's no trouble—you're sure?" Shay asked.

"No-absolutely no trouble, dude—no trouble at all," Reed assured him, and Shay had said okay. The only trouble, Reed thought, is between my fucking legs. Then for a panicked moment he wondered if he had said it out loud—that's how nervous he was!

After they hung up, Reed lay in bed, naked, playing with his cock for awhile, stroking its tumescence, dandling his balls, letting a finger stray to the tight cleft of his ass, his tingling hole. He didn't want to come too soon, but to linger under the spell of Shay's voice.

Then he did something he hadn't done for a long time. He went to a Mexican tin trunk he kept locked in a corner of his bedroom and started to burrow under layers of male poon magazines: Boyz Into Boyz, Straparoma, Romans In The Gloamin', Tight Scotsmen, Combat Booties and other more special ones such as Strapped For Cash, Rim Shots, Toes On The Line, Naval Nipples, etc.

There at the bottom was the college yearbook. It fell open naturally at Shay Walter's picture. The face of the all-American boy, the boy next door of everybody's dreams, shone forth. The page was stiff with dried come which almost obscured the list of Shay's athletic honors. But Reed had been careful never to shoot on Shay's face (though in real life, how he'd love to do just that)!

Reed had himself a real jerk-off then—a come as pulsing, deep and thrilling as he'd ever had—while visions of Shay's masculine beauty reeled through his head. The crystal drops that ran like sweat over his body in the shower, over his muscular shoulders, his tight belly, his big thighs, dripping obscenely from the furled tip of his cock, tantalizingly into the mind-boggling depths of his ass-crack and down his splayed manly toes.

As Reed lay back, exhausted, a realization entered his mind—a knowledge that he had tried desperately to keep at bay. Shay was straight! Shay was married, with kids. Well, at least two of them were boys and Reed wondered if there were two miniature Shays blossoming in Kankakee, Illinois, right now.

But what about Shay himself, he wondered? Was the bloom off, bald head instead of buzz cut, a pot instead of a six-pack where his stomach used to be? In a weird way, Reed almost wished it were so. In that case his dreams—his obsession—could be laid to rest.

Several days later, as the hour approached for Shay's arrival, hundreds of butterflies were doing flight maneuvers in the pit of Reed's stomach. He'd been fussing all day—like a bride, he thought, self-deprecatingly. He had prepared canapes, the makings of a steak dinner with all the trimmings, the setting-up of the bar, in case they wanted to stay in. But, in case of disappointment, they could always go out.

Finally the doorbell chimed and Reed took the long walk. As he opened the door, his mouth fell open at the same time. It was Shay—an every bit as attractive—if not more so, but different Shay.

The buzz-cut had been replaced by amber waves. His beautiful, silken hair fell about his face in an obviously very expensive cut. His suit, probably Armani, with a silken sheen as light as skin, of the kind that dress the pages of GQ, draped a body as impressive as ever, but with a more relaxed grace.

Along with the look of power Reed also discerned a certain softness that was most becoming. Above all, there was the knowing look in Shay's eyes. A warm hand-clasp was prolonged until Reed felt faint. They entered the house with Shay's arm on his shoulder. Heaven can wait, Reed thought at the touch.

They walked to the couch and sat down with thighs almost touching. Reed could feel the heat.

"Hey, guy," Shay purred in that steamy voice, "It's been a long time. Too long," he continued. "I've thought about you a lot, you know."

"Uhhh, me, too," Reed croaked.

"Yeah? Shay sounded a bit surprised. "You've thought about me, too?"

Reed's throat was so dry that all he could do was nod his head.

"Man, I was really fucked up in those days," Shay continued. "I knew what was going on—what it was all about—but at the same time I didn't want to know, so I just shut everything out."

"What do you mean?" Reed finally managed to find his voice again.

"About you and me," Shay said, looking directly into Reed's eyes with a grave intensity. "I know now that I was hot for you all during college. Didn't you know it, too?"

"No, no, I didn't," Reed said. "I never realized that you, uh, felt that way about me."

"Well, you stole my fuckin' underwear, you son-of-a-bitch!" Shay laughed. "I found 'em in your dresser—and I left them there on purpose."

"Yes...yes I did steal them," Reed admitted. "And you wanna' know something? I still have 'em!"

"You're kidding-show me!" Shay demanded.

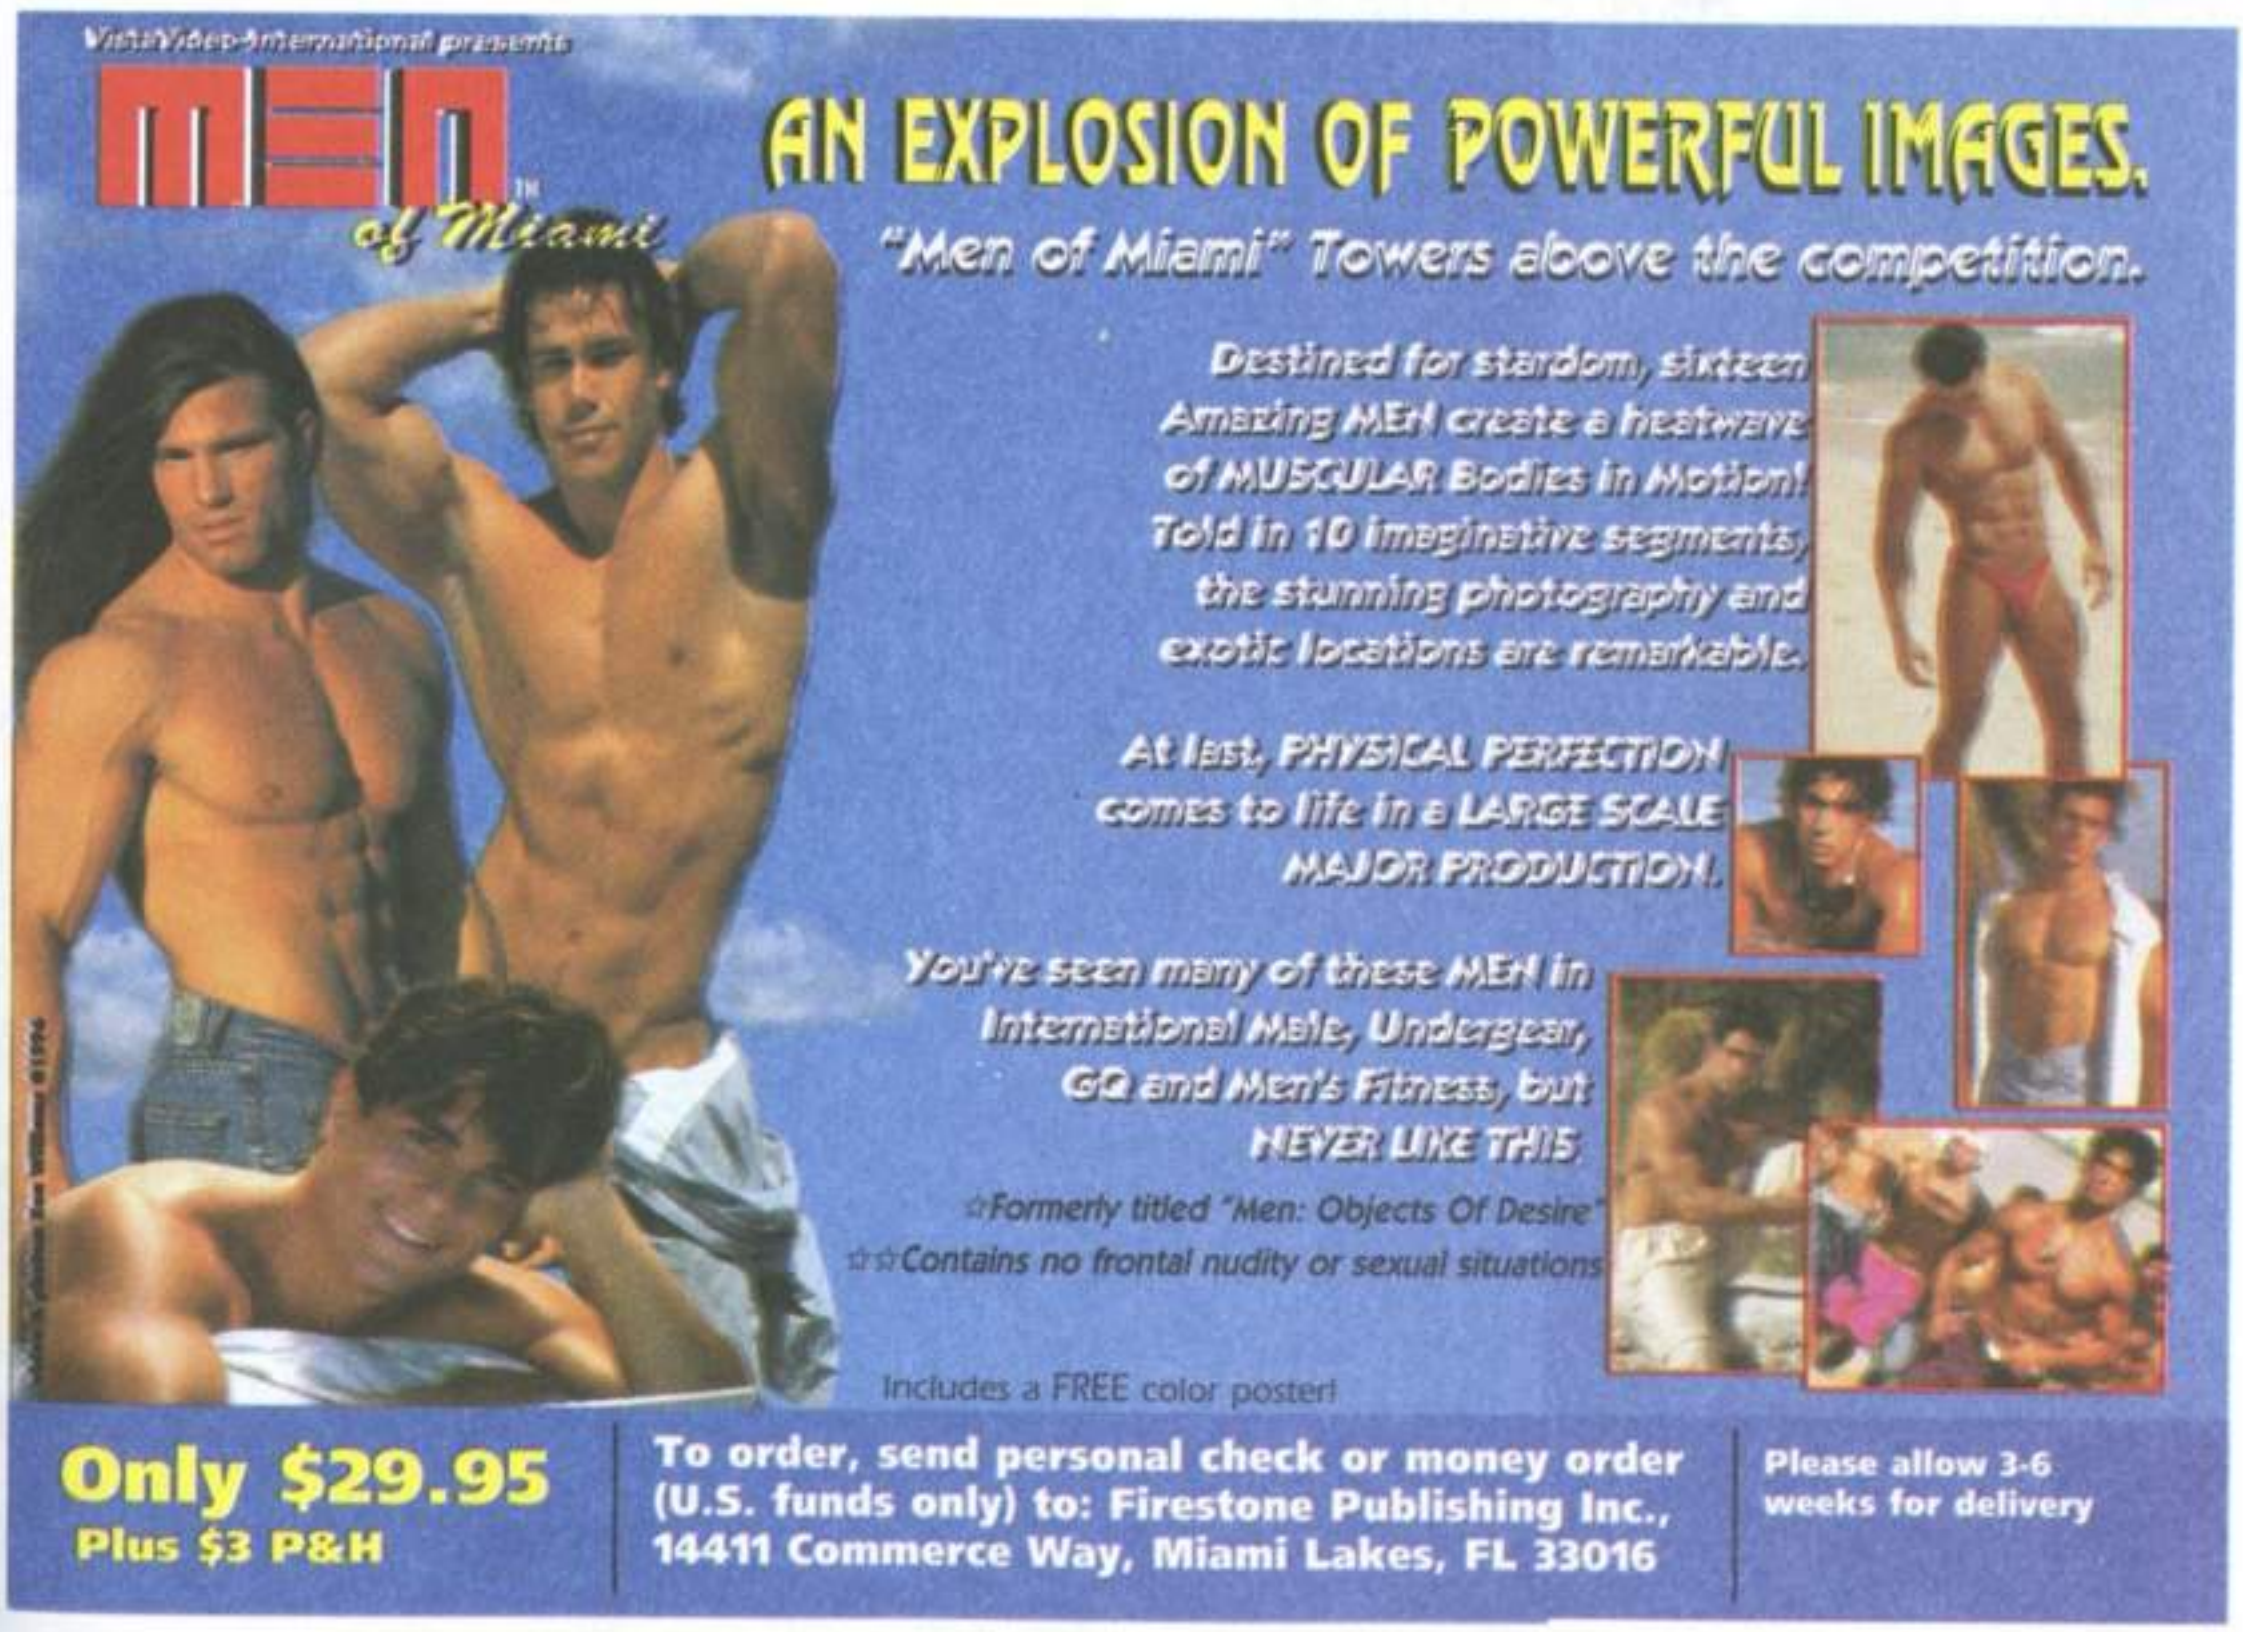
"If you come upstairs, I will," Reed replied.

Hands on each other's asses, the two guys ascended the stairs.

Clothes scattered the floor as if blown by a hot summer wind—Armani suit crumpled and thrown into a corner, French cotton shirt in a ball on the floor, briefs, socks and shoes discarded at the bedside and, in a moment, the miracle was happening.

Sweating bellies were grinding together, furry, well-defined male chests rubbing against each other with a thrilling abrasiveness, thick genitals mingling, moistly together like flowers on the same plant, thighs entwined, greedy fingers searching each other's asses.

The two turned-on guys swapped spit as hungrily as a desert bloom searching for moisture. They were all over each other, stopping only for a brief moment to stare into each other's faces, drinking in the beauty and the passion. They were on each other; in each other.



Shay slipped on a condom from his wallet and piston-fucked Reed with all his power and with all of the intensity he had every imagined.

Then, to Reed's surprise, he begged for Reed's cock in his butt.

"Please, fuck me," he moaned. "Fuck my hot man cunt. Oh, I want you inside of me so bad!"

Reed grabbed a rubber from the nightstand and fucked Shay as he had never fucked before, driving his hard prick to the hilt and then slowly pulling away until just the head remained inside that tight hole between those hard, muscular cheeks. Then he would plunge with all his force and hear that deep-throated voice moan in ecstasy. Being buried deep inside Shay's hot, constricting love hole was the realization of all he had every dreamed.

Being buried inside Shay's hot, constricting love hole was the realization of all Reed had dreamed.

Lifting Shay's leg and moving sideways, he pulled the handsome stud onto his back and then, lifting Shay's legs over his shoulders, he watched his cock going in and out of that molten hole.

Shay grasped his own prick and began jerking it, holding his balls with the other hand. As Reed felt the lava burning in his cock, threatening an eruption, he locked his lips on Shay's and their muffled moans filled the room as Reed shot his load deep into Shay's ass, whose white fountain of cum simultaneously splattered his own belly and Reed's chest.

As they licked each other's bodies—head to toes, stem to stern—Shay told Reed his story. After graduation, he had married the boss' daughter. She was rich—very rich.

"I knew something was really missing out of my life and I thought that was it...financial security and a family. She wanted kids—that's all she really wanted—that and the garden club and the country club and the social life, bridge luncheons and the shopping.

"Our sex life was a dud from the very beginning. I never was very good with the women and always wondered why I wasn't as fired up about them as all my buddies were.

"But Jennifer didn't seem, to care. She was pretty frigid as well as naive, so for a long time it worked out fine. I gave her what she wanted—a respectable, presentable husband. I was there for all the appropriate and important occasions and otherwise, I was pretty free to go my own way.

"You know, Reed, you're the only guy I ever had feelings for—sexual feelings. But I was terrified of them. I used to sit and look at you and I wanted so much to just walk up to you and tell you how I felt, but there was so much shame and guilt and fear that I couldn't do anything.

"I knew something was screwy when I started having dreams about you, and when I was jerking off sometimes, I'd see your face just before I came. I thought I was really sick and so I went out of my way to avoid any contact with men on anything other than a business or social level."

"But you said you knew that I was attracted to you," Reed responded. "You must have known I was gay...especially after the underwear-stealing incident."

"Yeah, I knew you were gay," Shay admitted. "I thought that was okay. It just wasn't okay for me to be."

"And what changed your mind?" Reed asked, curling a strand of Shay's pubic hair around his finger as he lay by his side.

"Well, finally it happened," Shay said. "I was on a business trip with another guy—a young, single guy who looked a little like you. And after a night of drinking and hell-raising, we got back to the hotel and he asked me into his room—for a nightcap.

"I know I was drunk but I was pretending to be drunker than I really was, and I think he was sort of faking it, too. We were sitting there on the side of the bed and we just stopped talking—just sort of froze there for a long moment and looked at each other. And then-and then he leaned over and kissed me!"

"Wow!" Reed smiled.

"I swear to God, I had never kissed a guy in my life," Shay insisted. "And for some reason, it broke the dam. It was like this huge thunder clap and I realized that this was what I wanted and that this was what I was!"

"And then what happened?" Reed asked softly. He found that Shay's confession was getting him aroused again. He could imagine himself in the other lucky guy's place.

"Well, it was pretty awkward," Shay admitted. "I mean, I was pretty inexperienced and all, but it was the first time I had ever really been sexually aroused to the point where I was really into sex and didn't have to fake anything. But you know what was weird?"

"What?"

"I'm in bed with this guy and we're playing around and kissing and exploring each other's bodies and all of that stuff," said Shay, "and suddenly, I imagined that it was you. I could see you so clearly and I remembered all the times before when I'd seen you naked in the showers, or just sitting talking and, well, I've been dreaming about this meeting ever since."

"I've dreamed about it since the first day I ever saw you," Reed answered.

"Now that we've gotten together, it won't be the last time, I promise you that!" Shay said.

Reed told him about the yearbook. Shay laughed and lay on his back with his knees up and his legs apart. He pulled his hairy ass cheeks apart, displaying his rosy, shining asshole.

"Get your Polaroid," he laughed. "I'll give you some more shots for that yearbook!" D

TONY

No, this is not Napoleon gone Zorro. And no, this is not the star of a pirate flick with an X-rated twist. Actually, it's just Tony, a 23-year-old grad student in history who works part-time at a Miami Beach costume store. "Things can get pretty boring here...especially after Halloween's over," this well-hung hunk admits. "So sometimes right after hours when the owner goes home and leaves me to close, I like to throw a little private masquerade party of my own."

Tony estimates that he's "modeled" about half the store's inventory so far. "There's something about dressing up in period clothing that makes me so horny," he admits. "The only thing missing is someone to admire these awesome getups." But Tony says that this too will change soon. "I'm writing my master's thesis on the historical implications of clothing through the ages," he explains. "And some of these costumes will be presented as exhibits." Too bad you can't model 'em this way, Tony.
