From the Coke bottles to the Edsel convertible, Chi Chi LaRue gets the 1950's details just right in his latest project for HIS Video, which just might mark the director's greatest triumph as both a storyteller and a pornographer. Kudos go to editor Tab Lloyd and our own Dave Kinnick, serving as videographer. Their side-by-side technical contributions together make this project anything but routine. At a 50's beefcake exhibition at a West Hollywood's art gallery, a gray-haired Zak Spears tells a young art enthusiast about photographing men in the "muscle magazine" era. Flashback to 1959, when Spears worked as an assistant to "Bob of Hollywood" (Mark West). Bob made it a policy never to fool around with his models, so it fell to Spears to arouse erections in model Lance Bronson."

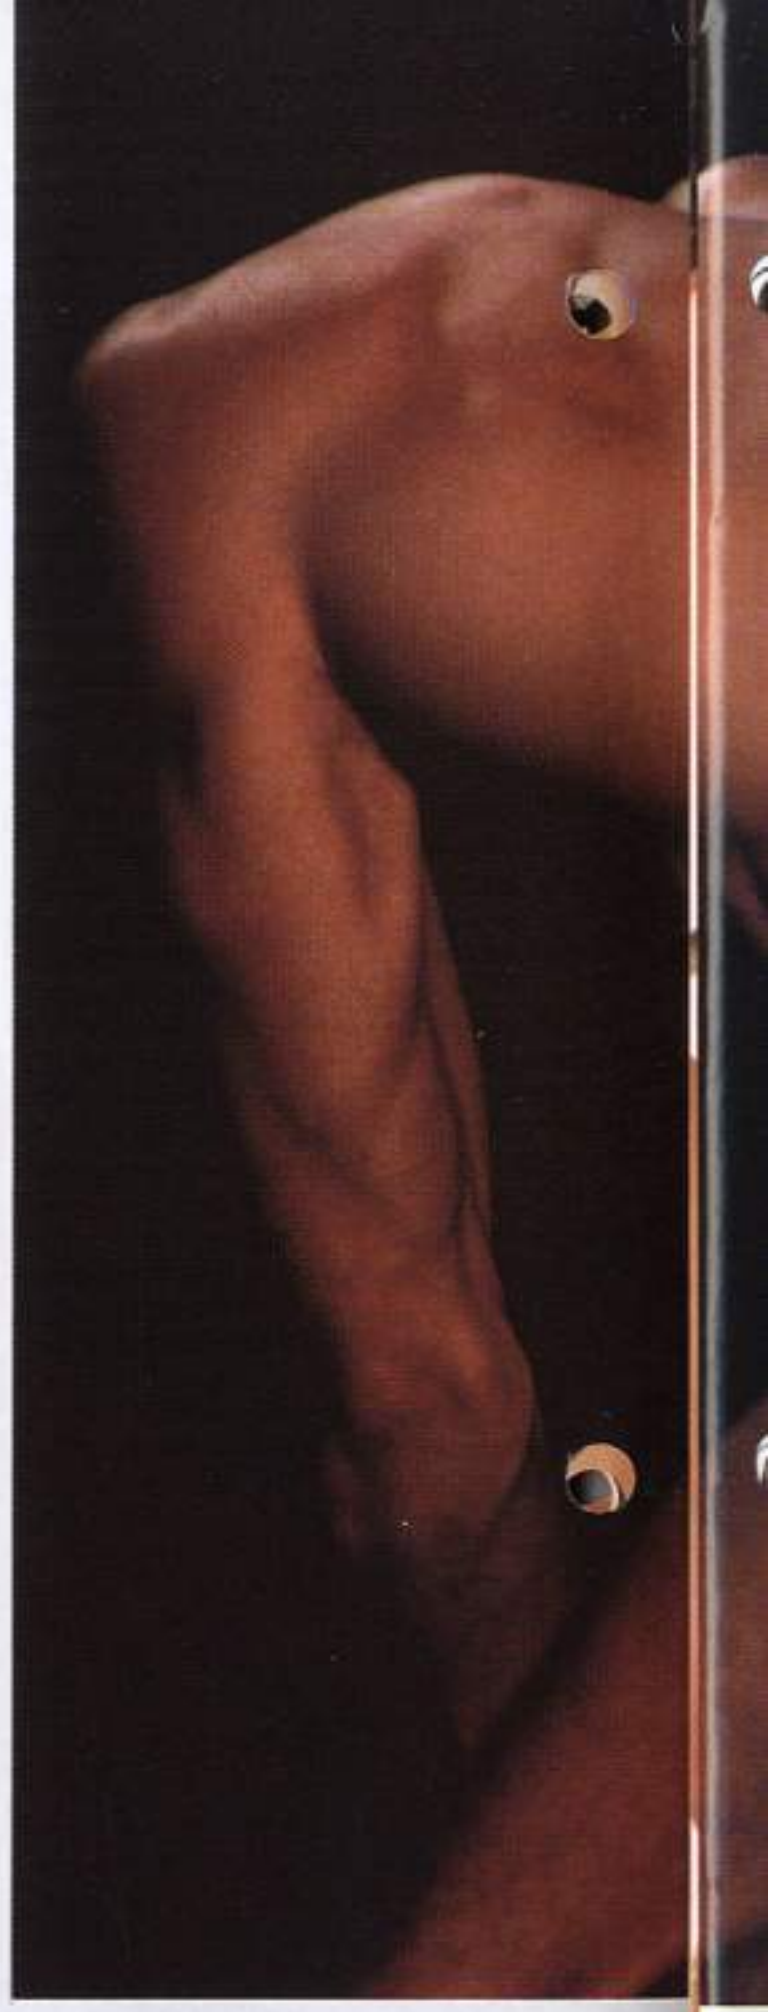
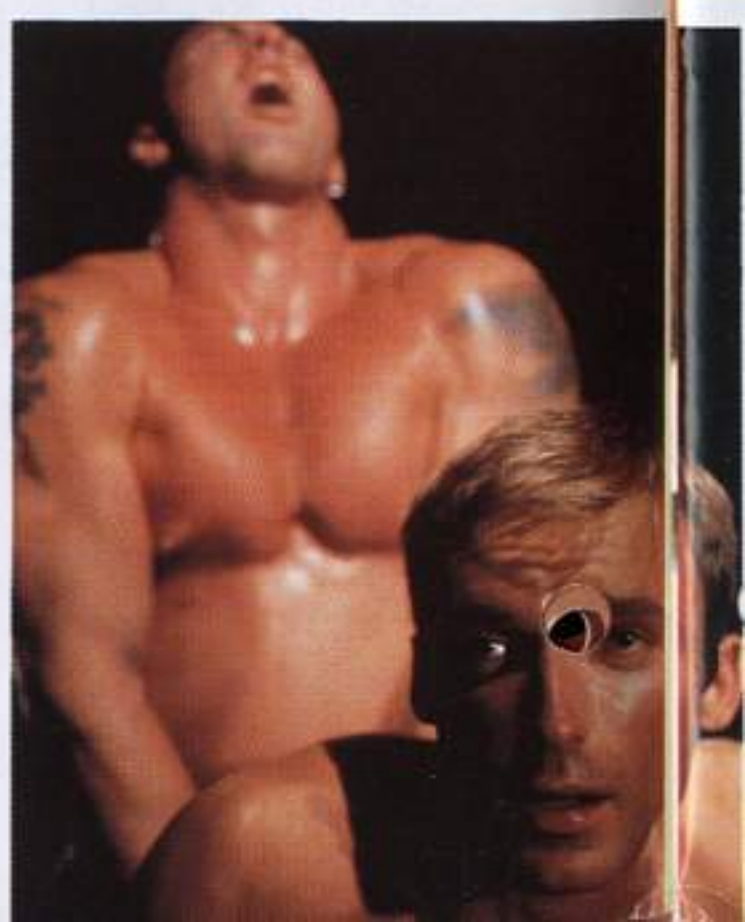
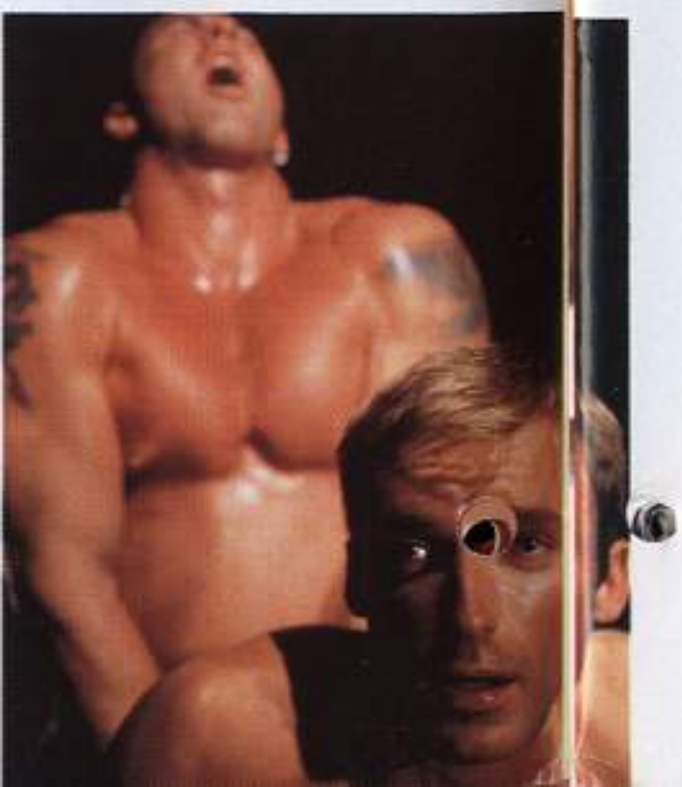
It's been rumored that Logan and Blake were actual real life neighbors in London at one time. Funny how they never got the chance to do the wild thing until they got to the States. Notice how LaRue and company make extensive use of side lighting in an attempt to reflect the style of the old time "posing strap" photographers as accurately as possible. "But no amount of behind the camera technique can impress more than the obvious love of the sex these two Brits bring to their roles."

The action is straight on.







This is certainly one of the hottest scenes we've seen this year. Appropriately, it is garnering a good deal of critical acclaim. Blake and Logan shoot hot cream out of their uncircumcised Euro-bangers while doing the deed in very Athletic Model Guild outfits. Hail Britannia!

The character of Bob is played by Mark West (opposite page, lower right) and is based on the highly respected Bruce of Los Angeles, whose work to this day is highly sought out by collectors. In our tale, Bob breaks down and has a J/O session with Randy Mixer, feels enormous regret about it, but finally gets together with him later when both admit they were more interested in each other personally than professionally.
